Conservative Protestants Making Comeback in Evangelicalism Movement

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press Correspondent
The conservative Protestant creed which used to be called "fundamentalism" is making a strong comeback under a new name.

The new name is "evangelicalism." It is preferred by most of the leaders of the resurgent conservative movement, including its best-known preacher, Billy Graham.

Graham's popularity is one index of the extent to which fundamentalist theology has recovered from the pounding it took from "modernists" in the period between World Wars I and II.

Another indication is the rapid growth of such unabashedly fundamentalist denominations as the Southern Baptists and Seventh Day Adventists.

Still another is the soaring circulation of the new "evangelicalist" magazine "Christianity Today," which in one year of publication has outstripped the liberal 50-year-old "Christian Century." Fundamentalism got its name from five "fundamental" doctrines which its adherents hold to be essential to the Christian faith.

They are: The infallibility of the Bible; the virgin birth of Jesus Christ; the belief that Christ, in his death on Calvary, achieved a "substitutionary atonement" for the sins of mankind; the bodily resurrection of Christ from the tomb; and the expectation that Christ will come again in person to establish his kingdom on earth.

Bitter Battle
During the 1920's, fundamentalists fought a bitter and decisive battle with "modernists" theologians who were prepared to water down or sacrifice these doctrines in an effort to "accommodate" Christianity to what then appeared to be an irresistible march of scientific materialism.

By the early 1930's, the modernists seemed to have won the fight. Fundamentalism was relegated to the fringes of Protestant life. Major denominations and theological schools came under virtually complete sway of liberals who deemphasized the Bible as an authoritative source of revelation and who spoke softly, if at all, about the Supernatural aspects of Christian doctrine.

Although fundamentalism is again becoming a powerful force in Protestant thought, there is little prospect of a renewal of the old battle with modernism. The reason is that there are few modernist theologians left to uphold the "winning" side of the 30-year old debate.

The dominant school of theology in Protestantism today is what is called "neo-orthodoxy."

By comparison with fundamentalism, neo-orthodoxy may be termed a liberal theology. But it is essentially a conservative reaction against the excess of modernism.

Several Viewpoints
For example, neo-orthodoxy leaves room for several viewpoints on the precise nature of atonement, but it takes very seriously the historic Christian affirmation that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." If it does not insist upon, neither does it deny such doctrines as the virgin birth.

The principle differences between today's "neo-orthodox" and "evangelical" theologians stem from differing views of the Bible.

Unlike extreme fundamentalists modern evangelicals do not, as a rule, uphold the belief that God literally "dictated" the words of the Bible. They admit the possibility that slight errors have occurred in translation or in copying manuscripts.

But with these qualifications, they regard the Bible as the "verbally inspired, inerrant word of God." For example, they read as genuine history the Old Testament accounts of the creation of the world in six days, the flood, and other episodes which many modern Christians regard as symbolic.

Large Mill Closes With 30 Men Out

An official of the Yoncalla Lumber Company said the mill would remain shut down until the lumber market improves.

tian doctrines has been one of the major features of neo-orthodox theology.

But while neo-orthodoxy accepts the Bible as a unique and divinely-inspired record of God's revelation, it also recognizes a human role — and therefore the possibility of error — in writing and transmitting the sacred books.

It also believes that the ultimate revelation of the "word of God" was in his incarnate son, Jesus Christ, and that all of the Bible must be read and interpreted in the light of this revelation.

Two Earthquakes Hit Resort City

Acapulco — Two earthquakes struck this winter resort city during Friday night, but apparently caused no damage or injuries.

The first struck around 2:30 a.m. with an oscillating motion that was accompanied by a deep rumbling in the earth. It was felt in Mexico City as well.

The second struck at 4:45 a.m. It also was accompanied by an underground rumbling but was of lesser intensity than the first.

Almost everyone was in bed at the time.
