

Ernie Pyle Winners Told

New York—The 1957 Scripps-Howard Ernie Pyle Memorial awards were won today by Walter Wingo of the Washington Daily News and Neil Morgan of the San Diego Evening Tribune.

Each will receive $1,000 in cash and a bronze plaque for writing and reporting "most nearly exemplifying the style and craftsmanship" displayed by Pyle, who was killed in the Pacific during World War II while serving as a war correspondent.

The trustees of the Scripps-Howard Ernie Pyle Memorial Fund also announced a grant of $2,500 to the Inter-American Press Association for an exchange scholarship.

The Pyle Fund was established by Scripps-Howard in 1952 with royalties received from Pyle's writings after his death.

Wingo, 26, was praised for writing with a minimum of words and simple words. Morgan, 34, was cited for a keen eye for significant detail. Both were described as men whose style of writing displayed warmth and men who were interested in people rather than things.

Then came the Western trend which almost put New York out of the TV business altogether. For every network show that bit the dust back East a made-in-Holly-

The 64-office firm introduced thrift certificates during the year which pay three per cent, compounded twice a year, when held to the 36-month maturity date. The certificates are available to both individuals and business organizations.

Several of the bank's branches had new building or remodeling completed during the year and one new building is still under construction. A second branch in Klamath Falls was opened during the year.

Fragments of the homemade device made from a piece of half-inch thick aluminum tubing lodged in the boy's lower legs. He also suffered neck lacerations from the blast, hospital attendants said.

McAbee said his missile was powered by sodium chlorate and sugar. He said he got the idea to build the rocket in his high school science class. His mother and three schoolmates had assembled to watch the "launching" when the explosion occurred. No one else was injured.
