Child Guidance Clinic Play Prepared for Presentation

"... And You Never Know" is the title of a play soon to be given before community and school groups. The play is written by Nora Sterling and will be presented as part of the Southern Oregon Child Guidance clinic's educational program. It deals with emotional problems to teenagers.

The direction, casting and staging of the play has a unique history. The responsibility for it was given into the hands of a group which has since been labeled "The Barnes Avenue Players." Those in the cast, the director and others associated with the half-hour play live on Barnes avenue and have taken interest in the play as a neighborhood project.

The cast is composed of Mrs. Claude Potts, Danae Pottella, and Dr. John Brandenburg. The play is under the direction of Mrs. Fred Danielson. Mrs. Brandenburg organized the group and has been working with them.

The last rehearsal and performance for discussion will be held at the Brandenburg home, Monday, January 13, at 8 p.m. At this time discussions from the Child Guidance Clinic board and staff will be present to consider the play and how best it can be used to provoke discussion in community and school groups.

There will be only six performances of this play this year and groups desiring to have it presented should contact Mrs. Danielson, Spring 3-5718, or Mrs. Brandenburg, Spring 3-4181, as soon as possible to arrange booking. It is hoped that some PTA units or community groups could combine so that the play will have a wide viewing.

The play is another project of the Child Guidance clinic board to promote better mental health in this community and to make more people aware of the emotional needs of children and resources for help.

Economist Urges Wiser Use of Package Mixes

Corvallis — Consumers counting minutes and money, can save both by wise use of package mixes. However, some mixes save more time and money than others, a home economist from Oregon State college extension service points out.

Cake mixes, for instance, are one of the best bargains in terms of time saved for money spent, says Mrs. Ruth Klippstein, OSC nutritionist. With a mix, a third of the time required to make a cake from individual ingredients can be saved and it only costs a few pennies more to buy the mix.

In general, money is saved by making baked goods from "scratch" but takes more time, she says. With a mix, homemakers can save one-half the time needed to make cookies, and one-fourth the time needed to make biscuits and pie crusts.

Package biscuit and cookie mixes cost 1½ times more than individual ingredients and package pie crusts almost twice as much.

According to U.S. department of agriculture reports, city homemakers are more likely to use mixes than farm homemakers. In a department survey, more than half of the city homemakers who baked a cake used a mix, compared with 34 per cent of farm homemakers. Cookies were made from commercial mixes in 20 per cent of the city kitchens and in 8 per cent of those on the farm.

In the city, biscuits came from mixes a third of the time, and pie crusts a fifth of the time.

To preserve the high quality of food, put no more unfrozen food into a freezer than will freeze with in 24 hours, or about 2 to 3 pounds of food to a cubic foot of freezer capacity.

Several recent theories suggest the head of a comet is an aggregation of frozen gases with small meteoritic particles imbedded within.

Potpourri

Every southern Oregon garden should have some winter jasmine in it. This hardy plant thrives without much care and in the dead of winter puts out flowers. Several days ago we noticed a flash of yellow among the twigs as we went down the driveway in the car and sure enough, when we took a closer look there was one little branch tip in bloom, in spite of the frost and ice. Monday morning before work we snipped off six or eight lengths and made an arrangement in the little green and yellow butter dish which was a present from daughter a number of years ago. In the warmth of the news room the buds soon began to unfold and now we have a brave display of little yellow blossoms. As far as we're concerned, how flowers can bloom in winter's cold remains one of nature's mysteries.

Housewives who get all worked up about the size of their grocery bills should take a closer look at them, according to extension food specialists at Oregon State college. Ten chances to one, the grocery bills aren't all food.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture and University of California made a survey of 1000 retail grocery stores to find out how many non-food items they carried. In 91 to 93 per cent of the grocery stores, many other articles were on sale, such as "notions and drugs," they found. Chain stores were more likely to carry more of these non-food items than independent groceries, and large stores are more likely to carry them than small ones.

The economists say that if you really want to know what food costs, be sure to subtract from the grocery bill such items as notions, drugs, cooking utensils, light bulbs, clothing, costume jewelry, cosmetics and magazines, all to be found in today's modern "grocery" store.

Patrick O'Donovan, writer for the London Observer News service, says Americans brag about their "classlessness" but have just as many symbols of class status as people of other nations. The reporter noted this particularly in industry, where many symbols set off the executive from the rest of the employees, or are designed to signify the proper rank of the executives.

Some of the common "rank symbols" are special parking places or special washrooms, some of which include attendants, free eau-de-cologne, linen towels or maybe even a sun lamp for the higher echelons, O'Donovan found. In Detroit it seems top executives get the use of two free cars (one for the wife), while lower executives have the use of company cars.

In one oil firm, a first class executive can choose between a Cadillac or an Imperial—fifth-level executives can choose between Chevrolets or Plymouths.

Brass spittoons beside a man's desk indicated high rank in the past—now a carafe of ice water and glasses on a tray, says the Observer reporter. Other important symbols of rank and power are the right to include your wife on the company expense account, membership in the country club paid by the firm, a large desk, a padded leather couch and an original oil painting on the wall. Of course, if the man has the use of a private elevator and has a real fireplace in his office, then he's really reached the top.

Other writers—and not always foreign—have commented from time to time how Americans are prone to criticize nations which support royalty, but nevertheless copy the pomp and ceremony and titles of royalty. Lodges, fraternal organizations and other groups in the United States use such titles as queen, king, prince, lord, knight, vizier and similar ranks in their orders. These officers are royally garbed in purple and gold and sit on regal thrones during elaborate ceremonies. From time to time some one speaks out against this system as "undemocratic" but apparently it is little heeded, since the groups continue to flourish.

Potpourri has been saving a little anecdote about a Medford hostess. This hostess had been asked by a committee to give a party for a visitor coming to the city, with all arrangements made over the phone to the accompaniment of childish laughter, screams and other family noises in the background. The hostess dutifully called several couples and invited them to the party, repeating a name which she believed to be the name of the guest of honor. She was reduced to near hysteria a few days later to discover that the name she had used was not that of the visitor and honored-guest-to-be, but that of a well known Medford business man who should have been invited to her party.

With one eye on the Saturday clock and the other on his typewriter, the MT sports editor produced this one: "Fish caught in the Rogue in the spring are largely small steel-head."

Reminded that it was quitting time and his wife would be waiting for transportation, Photographer Bob Vroman looked at the clock and said "There's plenty of time. She's just about now beginning to get ready to wait."—O.S.

Fresh pears are wonderful dessert treats for calorie watchers. Each medium sized pear contains only 60 to 70 calories, yet satisfies because of its sweet tasting levulose sugar. For a truly gourmet dessert, treat your calorie watching friends to a perfectly ripened pear half served with a wedge of lemon or lime. Serve on a dessert plate for a spoon eating dessert.

CHUKKA BOOTS

Ankle-high chukka boots are fashionable as well as a practicable sportswear accessory, reports the American Institute of Men's and Boys' Wear. Made in both smooth leathers and in rugged suedes, these boots come in two and three-eyelet styles and others fasten with straps. The most popular models carry either a plain toe or a moccasin-type front.

Cauliflower is recorded in human history as early as the 6th century B. C. It is the aristocrat of the cabbage family because of its sensitivity to climate, difficulty of culture, and relatively high price.

To remove grease spots from tablecloths, dust a little talcum powder on the stain. Let it set for an hour, then dust off. The powder will absorb the grease.
