Back Stairs: Ike Imitates Gestures

By MERRIMAN SMITH
United Press White House Writer

Back Stairs at the White House—When President Eisenhower finished his State of the Union Message to Congress last week, the House doorkeeper and the sergeant-at-arms walked over to Mr. Eisenhower, bowed in a most courtly manner, and shook hands with the first lady.

Doorkeeper William M. (Fishbait) Miller and Zeake W. Johnson, the sergeant-at-arms, didn't know the President was right on their heels, waiting to escort his wife back to the White House.

The President grinned broadly when the two men realized he was behind them and, somewhat redfaced, stepped aside.

Then, imitating their gestures, he made an equally courtly bow and shook hands with his smiling misses.

Under the revised White House social plans, a sciencemilitary dinner is a new entry on the winter schedule. It will be held Feb. 4.

The dinner, first of its kind at the White House, is a mark of the times when society formally acknowledged the space era and by serving steak with "Vanguard" sauce and "Jupiter" ice cream.

With the White House taking the lead, Washington hostesses will have to revise their thinking on guest lists and go after experts in aerodynamics rather than diplomats.

Mrs. Gwen Cafritz may find it necessary to bone up on the newest solid fuels for guided missiles. And it might become necessary for Mrs. Perle Mesta to take a cram course on space navigation if she is to talk knowingly with the new social guests.

Scientists generally are a rather independent and professional lot. It just might be that they will have to be instructed in the high formality of White House dinners—no baggy tweed jackets, but white tie and tails; no ruminate pipe smoking but only after dinner cigarettes and cigars.

Neither the President nor Mrs. Eisenhower smokes, and most of their guests hold off smoking until dinner is over.

Tree Farmings Said Widespread

Grants Pass — "Window dressing" is no part of the forest industry's tree farm program, according to H. R. Glascock, Eugene forester for Industrial Forestry association.

Instead, he said, the program is a sincere, hard-hitting and long-range effort on the part of the industry to boost timber production on private forest lands. Using their own land and money, timberland owners are shown their opportunities in forestry and that three farming is good business for them. The program does this without subsidies or tax incentives, Glascock said.

These statements were made last week at a meeting of the Society of American Foresters in Grants Pass. The topic for the meeting was a review of the association and its activities.

Calvin Smith, IFA's district forester at Medford for southwest Oregon, told of the group's activities since its formation in 1934. Working for minimum legislation and maximum voluntary effort in private forestry, the association originated the tree farm program in the United States in 1941. The movement has now spread to include 45 states which have a total of over 44 million acres of private forest land certified as well as managed, he said. IFA continues to administer the effort in the Douglas fir region of western Oregon and Washington where well over five million acres have been certified as West Coast tree farms.

Smith said these tree farms range in size from 5 to 500,000 acres and many of them are located in the Grants Pass and Medford areas. Their common goal is full and continuous production of forest crops on the land.

Smith told his association's present activities include operation of a forest nursery which this year is shipping 12½ million trees for planting private lands, development of a long-term tree improvement program under two leading forest geneticists, helping to develop an equitable method of taxing forest land so that immature timber will not be taxed off the land, cooperative work with government forestry agencies in forest protection, utilization and education and promotion of the tree farm program in the region under four district foresters.

Guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Jim Cassel of Trail, Mrs. Carroll Watson and children of Shady Cove and Bob Vincent, of Shady Cove.

The Shady Cove-Trail Lady Lions met Friday, Jan. 4, at the Rogue River Lodge. Final plans were made for a social meeting Jan. 15 with husbands of members as guests. At the social meeting a film on cancer will be shown.

The Shady Cove-Trail Lions board meeting was held Tuesday, Jan. 7. Paul Davis resigned as secretary-treasurer and Donald Harmon was elected to fill out the unexpired term of office.

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Kelley of Shady Cove spent Sunday in Central Point with Mrs. Kelley's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jantzer.

College Credits For High School Courses Approved

Eugene—(Special)—An advanced placement program, that will enable outstanding high school students in Oregon to receive college credit for college-level courses taken while in high school, has been approved by the University of Oregon faculty.

Proposed last month, the program is designed to aid the advanced high school student by allowing him to take college-level courses while in high school. Upon completion of the courses the students would take the yearly examination given by the College Entrance Examination board. Success in passing the examinations would give the student college credit in subject areas covered.

The program, although it is being used successfully by more than 133 colleges and universities, has so far never been applied in Oregon. It will be available immediately to students in high schools where the program has been instituted, according to Dean Robert D. Clark of the university's college of liberal arts. It will be opened this fall in high schools which introduce the college-level courses in their programs.

College-level examinations will be available in 12 fields under the new program. These include English composition, literature, European history, American history, French, German, Latin, Spanish, biology, chemistry, physics, and mathematics. Each high school participating will establish courses in accordance with their physical facilities and faculty strengths. The liberal arts dean ex-

Chairman Chosen For Heart Fund

Larry Clark of the Medford branch of the First National Bank of Portland has been appointed the Medford chairman of the Jackson County Heart Fund campaign scheduled for Feb. 1 through 28.

A door-to-door collection of funds will be made on Sunday, Feb. 23, according to Jackson county chairman John G. Crawford. At least 50 per cent of the total collections made in the nation will be used for research funds, he said.

Clark is the head of the trust department of the local bank. He is the president of the men's club and elder in the First Presbyterian church. In past years Clark has been active in the United Medford Crusade campaign.

He and his wife Mae, and daughters Sandra Lee and Virginia live at 2218 Dellwood ave. A son, Larry Jr., is in the Air Force.

Portland—(P)—The Morningside hospital of Portland, which has handled mental patients for Alaska for more than 50 years, had been fully accredited by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

pressed satisfaction that in approving the program, the faculty makes it possible for the university to help gifted students.

"I believe in the American goal of education for all," Dean Clark said, "but it has too often resulted in the neglect of the brilliant student. The advanced placement program will encourage him to move forward as rapidly as his abilities will allow. The program should improve standards both in Oregon high schools and at the university."

DOMESTIC GIANT—Star San Francisco Giants center-fielder Willie Mays, the "Say-Hey Kid," is also a domesticated kid, as seen here in the kitchen of his new home. Mays' wife, Marguerite, cinches up her husband's apron after the couple moved into a $37,500 home in San Francisco's Miraloma Park district.
