Experts See Bull Market Sooner Than Expected by Many

By ELMER C. WALZER

New York—Market experts are swinging to the view that a bull market may come sooner than many expect. They look for a pickup in business with government backing and they hold that the stock market will anticipate this pickup in its usual fashion of discounting things in advance.

Eldon A. Grime, analyst for Walston & Co., says the administration in Washington is looking for, and aiming for, a substantial recovery in business before summer.

"It must be obvious to the man in the street," he says, "that the administration must make business hum by summer in order to be able to collect the taxes that will help pay for this huge missile and defense program."

No Time for Recession
"We must get our entire economy up to new all-time highs if we are going to raise the money out of taxes. We can't afford a recession. Also we can't afford a recession with Russia sputniking ahead at full speed. Also, the administration can't afford a recession with the big elections coming up in November."

Obviously, Grime concludes, "if we are going to get a strong recovery in business, we are going to get a bull swing in stock prices much sooner than many people think."

Just now the market is reported suffering from the resistance that has developed each time the industrial average approached the 450 level.

Buyers and Sellers
Many people bought a lot of stock in October, 1957, when the market fell to an intraday low in the industrials at 416.15 on Oct. 22. And they are willing to sell on the way up to 450.

It came back to an intraday high of 452.49 on Nov. 29, fell off and rallied again to 449.61 on Jan. 8. Then it met new resistance.

Once this resistance is overcome on volume the market

Small Solid Fuel Rocket Launched

Cape Canaveral, Fla.—A small test rocket carrying parts of the Navy's solid fuel Polaris missile flashed up with a roar from Cape Canaveral today.

A Department of Defense announcement called the rocket "a test vehicle in the Polaris program."

It was impossible to see the rocket leave the ground, presumably because it got off so fast. But high in the blue sky the zooming projectile left a white smoke trail and a brief roar was heard.

The Polaris is an intermediate range ground to ground missile capable of being fired from submarines beneath the surface of the water. Its range is about 1,500 miles.

The Polaris is different from the ballistic missiles so far under development. It has a solid rather than a liquid propellant.

The completely Polaris assembly probably will not be fired at least until the end of this year.

The Army, meanwhile, was believed working on its big Jupiter C satellite carrier not far from where the Navy Vanguard is being readied in its gantry tower. But launching of either rocket was not believed imminent.
