Divorce Law Expert To Tackle Problem Involving Children

By ROBERT T. LOUGHAN
United Press Correspondent
Chicago — A Chicago judge, expert on divorce law, is so encouraged by the success of his "cooling off period" that he is ready to tackle another aspect of the divorce problem.

Julius H. Miner, formerly Circuit Court judge and now assigned to the Criminal Courts Division, was a prime mover in setting up 60-day waiting period after filing of a divorce suit and employing judicial counseling during that period.

Miner says his next step will be to work for laws abolishing divorce decrees in uncontested cases involving children.

His new plan would allow default decrees only after the case had been through a marriage clinic and after the judge had full facts on what would be done for the children.

Miner fought for his 60-day cooling-off law through the Illinois legislature and the State Supreme Court before it was finally upheld in 1955.

The 61-year-old (and happily married) judge made an eloquent plea to the Legislature.

"My courtroom is a cesspool of crime," he said once. "I break up homes, demolish families, tear children away from their parents—there is nothing constructive in my courtroom."

His cooling-off law, as finally passed, provides that the partner seeking divorce must file a notice or precis, stating the intention to sue.

During the 60-day period which must then elapse before a complaint can be filed, the judge calls in both parties and "talks turkey." He discusses the problem of their children, points out that financial problems will be even worse, tries to get at the root of their split.

Miner said that in 1957 there were 1,384 notices filed in which no complaint followed.

Will Take Time
"It will take time for the idea to find wider acceptance," he said. "It has to be developed with the proper temperament of the courts taken into consideration."

Similar laws are now on the books in New Jersey, Washington, Michigan, Iowa and Utah.

Miner said his chief concern in saving marriages relates to the effect of divorce on children.

"All marriages have their problems," Miner said. "My wonderful wife and I have had our quarrels. But almost all of these things can be solved far short of divorce."

Try and Stop Me
—By BENNETT CERF—

JOHN FULLER envisages what certainly will be the most unusual zoo in the world. It will include a school of whales that has a people of a good time, a boy-footed bear, a clam that mans up, a human-hearted lion, a turtle with an athlete-necked sweater, a hog who speaks man-wash, and a cat who lets gossips out of bags.

A venerable clergyman, visiting a church over which he had presided many years earlier, was greeted warmly by a white-thatched parsonage. "I don't remember the name," confessed the parsonage, "but the faith is familiar."

Walter Slezak looked wistfully out the picture window of his west coast hacienda and remarked, "I always can tell when my wife has taken out the car — by the tracks across the lawn."
