Dodgers Obtain Use Of Coliseum; Other Renters Gain Bonus

Los Angeles — President Walter O'Malley of the Los Angeles Dodgers today set his sights on an attendance mark of 2 million fans during the 1958 season as he finally obtained use of the huge Memorial Coliseum for his club.

The Coliseum commission by unanimous 9-0 vote last Friday granted the Dodgers use of the 101,000-seat stadium with the blessings of other tenants who previously had objected to O'Malley & Co. getting a better rental deal than they received.

The compromise finally worked out called for the Dodgers to guarantee the Coliseum $200,000 a year in rent for two years but in return for that O'Malley's club will get the concession rights for all except nine games.

Under the compromise formula, the Dodgers after the first three games of the opening series with the Giants will pay 10 per cent rent for nine games and waive concession profits.

The other major tenants — the Rams pro football club, University of Southern California and UCLA — had objected that they paid 10 per cent rent and O'Malley had offered either five per cent or $200,000.

The three other tenants also got a bonus from the Dodgers to guarantee the Coliseum $200,000 a year in rent for two years but in return for that O'Malley's club will get the concession rights for

The skimpy crowd of 1,077 at the nationally televised bout boomed and hissed as Johnson and Whitehurst staggered through the bout. A warning blow was never landed — for two reasons, Johnson said.

"I weighed only 176 pounds," said Johnson, "if I had had two more pounds my fists would have carried conviction. So I boxed. And I won. That crowd didn't know what they were seeing."

Whitehurst weighed 196 pounds and at six feet was two inches taller. But the Baltimore heavyweight, whose
