Need for Employment of Former Mental Patients

Recently, Mr. J. Gilmore Marquis of the National Association for Mental Health, said what I have said repeatedly in this column, this is that we in America are terribly cruel to the man or woman who has recently been discharged from a mental hospital. We just won't give him a job. The minute an employment manager finds that the man before him has been in a mental hospital, that's that. No one will let him work, even as a common laborer digging in a ditch. I imagine every prospective employer fears that some day the fellow will go berserk and kill some of the people about him. But this fear is not justified because so few of the mentally troubled people even in a mental hospital are violent. Many of them are really too quiet. Practically all of the people who have been dismissed from a mental hospital, unless they have been in the criminal division, are going to be safe; they are not going to attack anybody or go berserk. As a result of our lack of knowledge about psychoses, the only way in which a man who has been in a mental hospital can get a job is to go to some other city and there say nothing about his past troubles.

pointed out by Lillian Cole (1955) is that 15 or 20 percent of the patients who have been in a long time in a mental hospital have developed what she calls institutionalitis. In other words, they have become so dependent on the care and the shielding from harm that they have received in the hospital, that when they go out into the world, cured, it takes them some time to get used to living by themselves. They greatly need help to learn to run their own lives again. If this help is not given them, they will remain dependent on the community, and may even have to go back into a mental hospital, where they do not quite belong. This is particularly true of the person who, after recovering from a spell of insanity, has no home to go back to.

One way of handling these patients in some hospitals is to put them on the staff at a moderate salary. Then they live in quarters apart from the rest of the patients; they get their board and lodging, laundry, and medical and dental care; they help in the hospital, and they are free to come and go after hours. These persons usually remain under the supervision of a vocational psychologist who helps them later to secure a job out in the community, and then watches over them for a while.

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Hector S. — My daughter has turned against my wife. Loretta S. — Everyone holds a grudge against me.

Hector S. — I was a widower for three years until I recently remarried. I have two small sons. I have a daughter of 13 and I thought we'd make one big, happy family.

My daughter, Loretta, was very thrilled about my marriage and had often told me she was crazy about my wife. Maureen, my wife did everything to win Loretta's affection — bought her clothes, helped her with her schoolwork, spoke up for her when I wouldn't let her wear make-up.

Now that we are married, Loretta seems to have turned against Maureen. She is fresh and disobedient. She doesn't help out with the chores. Maureen is terribly upset and at her wife's end about how to handle her.

Loretta S. — All the blame gets put on me, no matter what happens. I know I'm often in the wrong. I have a terrible temper. I just don't seem to know how to control it. Things come out of me before I know what I'm saying or doing. I'm sorry after, but everyone holds a grudge against me.

My father always takes Maureen's part, never even listening to my side of the story. Sometimes Maureen is very unfair and bossy. She'll ask me to do the dishes, even though I have lots of homework.

I know that Maureen and my father are very disappointed in me, but they didn't even give me a chance. They got disgusted with me the first time I lost my temper and have never forgiven me.

The Council: Hector and Maureen should recognize that their problems with Loretta are not at all unusual. If Maureen were Loretta's real mother, she would be facing very similar problems with her at this time.

It is unfortunate that they have taken Loretta's outbursts so seriously because the girl genuinely feels unwanted and disliked by her father and stepmother. Even if she were easily forgiven, she would probably nurse such feelings — to a lesser extent. It is rather hard for her to adjust to a new mother after a brief period of being her father's only girl.

Loretta, of course, does not realize that Maureen's apparent "grudge" comes out of a sense of failure in dealing with her. Maureen should not be so easily discouraged. She should be willing to accept the fact that this child can't
