Erasing Cancellation Mark

On Stamps an Old Trick

Jim sliced open the envelope. There was no check in it, just a stamp and a letter. He gave the stamp an X-ray glance, laid it aside and read the letter aloud.

"Dear Jim," he read. "This stamp might be a bargain, but at $250. I suggest you take another look at the stamp—a close one—and then revise it drastically downward."

The stamp was a rose-colored, 25-cent, issue that I had not seen before. It was not an ornate one, like so many of the South American stamps. Its design consisted of an oval portrait of Simon Bolivar in the center with the denomination below and the single word ESCUELAS above. There wasn't even the name of the country on it.

"I know 'Escuelas' means schools," I said, "but how come the name of the country isn't there?"

"It's a Venezuelan stamp, put out for fiscal purposes back in the 1870s, and the country's name isn't on it because it wasn't meant to be used for postage," Jim said. "But that's not the trouble."

He produced a strong magnifying glass, switched on the strong light and studied the stamp for about 15 seconds. "Darn!" he exclaimed. "I've fallen for one of the oldest tricks in the book. Look here."

With the aid of the glass and the light I was able to make out two wavy, shadowy strokes in the form of an X. Between the arms was the suggestion of an N and a B.

"It's a genuine stamp, right enough," he said. "But it's been cancelled, apparently by the Banco Nacional, and some smartly eradicated the pen marks—almost."

The difference in value was enough to justify the effort. Uncancelled, the stamp catalogued at $275 as against a top of $60 in used condition.

GERMAN PROSPERITY BACK TO GOLD COINS

"You want $140 for the latest German gold coin," the customer said, pointing to a sign on the counter. "What's that—something put out by the Kaiser?"

"Oh, no. The very latest—one of those issued last fall."

The customer looked no more surprised than I.

The coin was a rather striking one. On its face was a portrait of Konrad Adenauer.

The reverse side of the coin carried a study of a female allegorical figure symbolizing peace. But characteristically enough, the Latin motto beneath the figure put something else ahead of it. "Securitas Pax—1957" was the way it read. In other words, Security first and then peace.

"But $140 for that coin! Have you got any others?" the customer asked.

The clerk produced two more. They were both of the same design, but one was smaller and the other larger than the first one that had been shown.

"The little one is $70. The big one, $198."

The prices seemed unreasonable high, but not to the clerk.

"We're really not asking much of a premium," he said. "It figures out to about $20 per coin."

The customer bought one, turning to me. "We conquered Germany twice this century. She's beaten, disarmed, and in good condition, that was not at all unreasonable for a first edition. Indeed, that volume has brought $70 and $80 on three or four occasions in the past years that I know about."

"The price really isn't high," the elderly gentleman agreed, "except for a man who buys like me. I'm a speculator, and when I buy, it's got to be a real bargain, a sure-things speculation."

FIRST EDITION TRADER SEEKS ONLY GOOD BUYS

I wanted to get the book entitled "Villa Ruben," one of those turned out by the famous John Sinjohn.

But as I reached past the elderly gentleman his hand shot up by mine and seized the book.

"I like Sinjohn, too," he said, particularly when he used that name instead of Galsworthy.

I looked over his shoulder while he examined the volume, keeping up a stream of comment.

"It looks like a first," he said. "It has 'Duckworth & Co.' at the bottom of the spine instead of just 'Duckworth' as a later issue does. And also this is a cherry-colored cloth binding rather than the light pink of the second issue."

He rifled swiftly through the pages, all of which seemed to be in good order. "Two hundred and fifty-eight of them, just as there ought to be," he said. "But I don't think I'll take it. Do you want it, son?"

He handed the book to me. "What's the matter with it?" I asked, opening to the title page and glancing at the date. It had been published in London, in 1900.

"Nothing at all," he said. "Except the price. Have you seen that yet?"

I hadn't, but it didn't stagger me. It was $60, but for one of the first works of John Galsworthy, and in good condition, that was not at all unreasonable for a first edition. Indeed, that volume has brought $70 and $80 on three or four occasions in the past years that I know about."

"The price really isn't high," the elderly gentleman agreed, "except for a man who buys like me. I'm a speculator, and when I buy, it's got to be a real bargain, a sure-things speculation."

Holmes Joins in Economic Plan

Salem—Gov. Robert D. Holmes joined 10 other governors Thursday in suggesting to President Eisenhower a national program to break the growing recession. The governors offered to meet with the President to seek ways and means of battling the economic sag.

The President was urged by telegram to make prompt use of federal funds for building and construction projects and to loosen "tight money" policies.

Signers besides Gov. Holmes were Govs. Freeman of Minnesota, Furcolo of Massachusetts, Harriman of New York, Loveless of Iowa, McNicholas of Colorado, Muskie of Maine, Meyner of New Jersey, Roberts of Rhode Island, Rossellini of Washington, and Williams of Michigan.

They also sought restoration of Hill-Burton funds for hospital construction; a "realistic" program of federal assistance to school construction; expansion of housing; slum clearance and urban redevelopment programs; provision for flood control, and water conservation and other resource projects.

Portland Prowler Killed by Police

Portland—A prowler who failed to obey a command to halt was shot and killed by police here early Friday. The man was identified through fingerprints as Theodore Ellsworth Anderson, 40, Portland.

Police said that a witness had reported a burglary in progress at the Ace Hobby Repairs on Sandy boulevard. Juvenile division officers Bruce Neelands and Robert Nasby were nearest the scene and drove up to see a man placing merchandise in the rear of a pickup truck.

The officers identified themselves and the man started to drive away. Two shots by Neelands flattened a rear tire and another, higher, shot struck Anderson in the back after he ignored shouted commands of the officers.
