Porter Proposes Forest Service, Jobless Measures

Washington — Bills to decrease national unemployment and to give the U. S. Forest Service control over surface resources and surface management of national forest lands were introduced last week by Congressman Charles O. Porter (D-Ore). Both provide companion legislation to Senate bills. The Public Works Act of 1938 (H. R. 10632) calls for the appropriation of $500,000,000 to provide Federal Assistance to states and local governments for the construction of needed public works and public improvements. The ratio would be $90 of Federal assistance for every $10 of State or local funds made available for a project. In introducing legislation identical to that proposed by Senator Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), Porter noted that continued increasing unemployment on the national level was evident. His bill is designed to help offset slowdown employment markets. State level action in Oregon was proposed October 6, 1957, in Roseburg. At that time Democratic county chairmen in the Fourth Congressional Districts addressed a resolution to Governor Robert Holmes proposing state aid to stem current unemployment. Bill identical The surface management of national forest lands bill (H. R. 10633) is identical to one introduced by Senators Neuberger and Morse. It is aimed at closing loopholes which permit miners or mining companies to cut excessive amounts of federal timber growing on mining claims and patents. Representative Porter said the legislation as proposed was not designed to impede miners but rather to establish a "uniform policy, procedures which already exist on six national forests, including Mt. Hood." It would prevent another Al Serena, Porter said. The legislation allows persons who locate mineral deposits on national forest land to occupy and use the surface to the extent necessary to carry out prospecting and development work. Timber may be cut and used for actual mining operations. Porter said that if a claim is patentable under the mining laws, a patent will still issue, but the bill conveys title only to the mineral deposits within the boundaries of the claim and the right to use the surface timber to the extent essential to actual mining operations.

Atomic Power in Autos Doubtful

Portland —(AP)—A nuclear physicist said Monday that the prospects of atomic power for commercial aircraft, railroad locomotives and trucks and automobiles are remote. Dr. William E. Parkins told the Chamber of Commerce that "nuclear energy for the propulsion of land vehicles holds essentially no potential for the future." He pointed to disadvantages in size requirements for shielded reactors in cars and trucks and even locomotives. Limitations imposed by weight of shielding also make nuclear aircraft propulsion chances remote, although he said "it is possible large military manned aircraft may eventually be built using nuclear propulsion plants." Dr. Parkins said nuclear energy has a good future for both Navy and merchant ship propulsion.
