Thirty Class Members Attend Meeting Friday

Thirty members of Shipments class of First Methodist church met in the church dining room Friday. Mrs. Bernice Kunzman reviewed the question of "Race Relations in the Church" and what is being done about this important subject. There was group singing and Mrs. Anne Goby closed the meeting with devotions.

Dr. Dena Cedarquist, head of the Michigan State university's department of foods and nutrition, says Americans don't plan meals from a nutritive standpoint, but are swayed by "unconscious meanings of food." Three eggs equal one T-bone steak in protein value, says the nutritionist, but this is forgotten when planning today's meals. Instead, we considered steak as "masculine," vegetables as "feminine" and peanut butter as "childish." Be that as it may, Dr. Cedarquist. This greying reporter loves peanut butter and would eat more of it except that it has so many calories—O.S.

Potpourri

There was a time Monday noon when this reporter believed there must be something wrong with our ears. For the speaker for the meeting of Jackson County Republican Women was standing there and saying right out loud that the trouble with Republicans is that they don't read. In fact, he said that some of the worst informed people in Oregon are so-called "good Republicans."

Of course what the speaker, Wallace Hunter, public relations director for the party in Oregon, could have said, was that Americans don't read enough—not just Republicans. Practically everyone could follow Mr. Hunter's advice to good advantage. Don't just read the headlines in the newspaper, he said—read the whole story. If it has some facts you may need in a future argument, cut it out and file it away where you can find it, or carry it in your purse or pocket if it is on a subject being discussed often.

When you go to a meeting or lecture, take along a pencil and paper and take notes. If the information is important, study the notes and file them away. When you argue, or enter into a conversation, know what you're talking about was the essence of Mr. Hunter's speech. He was making the point that Republicans need to have lots of accurate information at their finger tips in order to talk back to the Democrats, but his advice is just as valuable to others.

Many articles have been written and a lot said about the reading habits of Americans as compared to those of European nations, for instance. The number of libraries in this country is smaller, per capita, than either Sweden or Great Britain, according to a recent article in a national literary magazine, and the circulation of books is smaller. The number of book stores is also said to be smaller, on a comparative basis, and book sales below those of most European countries. Mr. Hunter's advice is good advice—read more and read well.

Two letters in Potpourri's file recently came from Senator Richard Neuberger. One was originally to Mrs. Harlan Bosworth, saying that Medford Council of Church Women's telegram concerning legislation authorizing federal acquisition of the Klamath Indian reservation had been received, and read into the record so that senators considering the present Klamath Termination act might have it available.

The other accompanied an excerpt from the Congressional Record which quoted Senator Allen J. Ellender of Louisiana about education in Russia.

Senator Ellender, who visited Russia and apparently gathered much information on education and schools, reported to his fellow senators that Russian children begin studying fundamental mathematics in the sixth grade, chemistry in the sixth grade and physics in the seventh. They must take a foreign language, either French, English or German. "There is no wide selection of easy courses, such as we have in our country," Senator Ellender said.

Questioned by Senator Neuberger about the status of teachers, Senator Ellender said: "Teachers, as a rule, are well paid. Many receive the equivalent of as much as $700 or $800 a month. The teaching profession is considered one of the noble professions. Teachers are given good facilities with which to work. Of course, the buildings do not compare with ours by any means. However, when one goes through the school laboratories, one is very much impressed. They have all kinds of modern equipment."

Later he said there is greater inducement in Russia for young people to go into the teaching profession and added "Teachers study at higher institutions at government expense. They are then assigned to positions according to the level of knowledge obtained. In other words, they are given full opportunity to practice their professions, in the same way that a doctor or member of any other profession is treated."
