Red Chinese Army Bidding for Better Relations With Civilians

By WENDELL S. MERICK United Press Correspondent Hong Kong — (AP)—Red China's army is making another bid to improve relations with the civilian population. The first step was to order army units to grow their own pork and vegetables. The latest is an order under which virtually all private homes requisitioned from civilians will be returned. This decision came at the all-army barracks control work conference in Peiping. Get 'Eviction' Orders The conference, according to the Communist New China News agency, "decided that excepting the Marine defense units, frontier defense units, anti-aircraft units, Railway Corps and the National Defense Engineering corps that really need private homes and could continue to rent and use them, all PLA (People's Liberation Army) units should as from March this year, cease renting private houses they have already rented." The requisitioning of private homes, along with the food problem has angered farmers and city-dwellers for months along the coastal areas, especially in Kwangtung province in the south and Fukien province on the East coast facing Nationalist Formosa, where the Reds found it necessary to take over private homes to house troops. Apparently Fukien, which is regarded by the Chinese as a top-security area, won't be much affected by the new order. But in inland regions, the army will build barracks for itself to live in, as well as produce much of its own food. Know the People It is all part of Peiping's campaign for the army "to get to know the people." NCNA pointed out the extensiveness of the requisitioning in reporting the Peiping conference held in January. It said that "last year, alone, various units returned a total of 74,200 houses" to the original owners. Judging from the fact that a new, wide-sweeping order has gone out to turn back housing, it can be figured that the number of dwellings still held by the army is far greater than the number already returned.

Justice of Peace Courts Investigated

Chicago — (AP)—Justice of the Peace courts are under investigation in four states to determine whether they are meeting current judicial needs, the American Judicature society reported.

The Judicial Council of New Hampshire called for abolition of the criminal and civil jurisdiction of JPs in a recent report.

Michigan's legislature, the society said, has appointed a special committee to study the JP system. Testimony before the committee pointed to a need for wholesale changes, the society's journal noted.

Also under study are JP courts in Minnesota. A legislative interim committee is conducting the survey of the state's lower court system.

Finally, the society said, criticism is being directed at the JP system in Colorado by a survey committee of the state bar. The committee's chairman, the society disclosed, recently said the system breeds "incompetence in administration" and "complete disrespect by everyone." The Colorado bar committee is recommending that salaries replace fees for JPs.

Earlier last year, the Ohio legislature abolished all JP courts, the society added, and set up in their place a state-wide system of county and municipal courts.

Some pasture soils are generally poorer because they are too acid for the best growth of pasture legumes or the better pasture grasses. Their improvement usually requires lime.
