Faculty Member To Be Speaker For Crater PTA

Central Point—Dr. Arthur Kreisman, on the faculty of Southern Oregon college, will speak for a meeting of Crater Parent-Teacher association to be held Monday, February 24. It is set for 8 p.m. in the school cafeteria.

The honor society for journalism, Quill and Scroll, will hold initiation.

This being founders' month past presidents of the unit will be recognized during the coffee hour.

Forty additional members are needed to surpass the total for last year. Anyone interested in joining is asked to contact Clinton Charley, Normandy, 4-2734, or Mrs. Robert Pfaff, Normandy 4-1051. Senior class mothers will serve.

At a recent meeting of the unit, Mrs. Leigh Gustison, first vice-president of the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers, told of the necessity of high school PTA. "The needs and problems of the adolescent differ greatly from those of childhood, and a high school PTA should study youth's needs, emotional, educational, spiritual and social then see how the home, school and community meet those needs," she said. Mrs. Gustison also stated that "Parents and teachers need to share their knowledge of adolescent development, and of the individual boy or girl, and unite in guiding youth toward a happy, responsible maturity."

Dr. N. K. Tully, minister of Central Point Presbyterian church, gave the invocation. The flag salute was led by Boy Scouts from Troop 40. Members of the honor guard were Daniel Hays, Dennis

Automation For Dinner

Hollywood—The toastmaster was taking no chances that speakers at the National Standard Parts association convention would overrun their allotted time. The orators knew they had to sit down when a traffic signal in the rear of the room turned amber then red. For added emphasis, a bell clanged vigorously.

If you have to be careful what you eat, here's good news. Medford Public library has special cook books for those on diets or under a doctor's care.

"Behind the Times, Miss Agatha?"

Sometimes it might be okay for people to be "a little behind the times" . . . But it just won't do for businesses. It takes lots of specialized equipment . . . continual study of new techniques to keep up with the very latest methods. And if you're moving your family's valuable household possessions . . . you'll want to call the best . . . That's why in Medford and Ashland—most people CALL DAVIS. Why don't you?

Transplanting Seedlings Explained by Gardener

Don't be in a hurry to transplant your seedlings from indoor boxes to the outdoor garden. Years of experience have taught me that there's really nothing to be gained by setting out plants for a period of cool, wet weather in early Spring. Even if the weather does not kill them, you've gained nothing—because the plants do not grow at all when the weather is cool and wet. Wait until the ground is warm and all danger of really cold weather has passed.

If you've started your indoor seeds too early, or if the winter has been unusually long, it may be that your seedlings are ready too soon for transplanting and are beginning to show signs of becoming spindly from their crowded indoor living. If this is the case, it may be necessary to transplant them to a larger, deeper box so they can be further apart and their roots can continue to spread. Better still, when you see that they are growing so rapidly that they will be ready for transplanting too soon, retard their growth by giving them less light. When your garden soil feels warm and crumbles when squeezed, you'll know the weather is warm enough to transplant.

Fertilizer Use
First, make a hole that is about the depth and width of your trowel, which will be larger than needed. If your soil is not rich enough for your plants, sprinkle a little fertilizer or drop a plant tablet in the bottom of the hole. Use caution when sprinkling the fertilizer, as too much will burn the plant's roots. For this reason you should cover the fertilizer or plant tablet with a bit of soil to protect these roots. Then fill the hole with water. Follow this operation with one or two more holes, giving the water in the first hole a chance to soak into the soil. When this has happened, place the plant in the hole, transplanting as much of the original soil around the roots as possible. The plant should then be covered in the new hole to the same point on its stalk that it was covered in its old indoor home. To accomplish this, hold the plant up to the proper height and fill in a little soil underneath it.

Be sure that the roots of the plant extend downward, letting them spread out if they are bushy. Then bring some of the moistened soil from the sides of the hole and pack it gently around the roots. Use your hand rather than a trowel, as the roots must not be broken or damaged in any way. Now fill the hole with the soil that has been taken from it, leaving the surface a little below the level of the surrounding ground. Fill this indentation with water and let it stand. Later, after the water has had time to soak in, press the soil down around the plant. Add a bit more soil to keep the level of the hole nearly to the level of the surrounding soil. Then add more water and return that evening or the next morning to water again.

Cloudy Day Good
The best time to transplant is on a cloudy day or in the cool of the evening. If the days are hot, cover the young plants with boxes during the day—at least for the first two or three days until they have become acclimated. Of course as most transplanting is done in the springtime, such measures are not usually necessary. In conclusion let me urge you not to be discouraged if a few of your beautiful plants lie prostrate in the ground at first. Most of them will perk up within a few hours. If you've transplanted a few extra seedlings, you'll have some "fillers" in case some plants do fail to grow.

One final word about transplanting: Many popular varieties simply do not take easily to transplanting. Flowers such as candytuft, clarkia, lupine, mignonette, nasturtium, poppy, sweet pea, and zinnia could be transplanted, but the results would probably be disappointing. If you're growing these varieties, and if you want lovely results that will make your garden sparkle like a flower show, you'd do best to plant the seeds outdoors, where you want the flowers to grow.

Candied sweet potatoes are extra good if you use a blend of honey and orange marmalade instead of the usual sugar glaze. End the big meal with a tantalizing topping on your pumpkin pie: slivers of crystallized ginger sprinkled on a circle of whipped cream.
