

Family Council

Clara F. — My husband is jealous of our children. Hubert F. — want us to enjoy things together.

Clara F. — I am having a very difficult time with my jealous husband. This may sound silly when I state our ages—57 and 58. Nevertheless it's a fact. My husband is jealous about the time I spend with our children!

We have four married children and five grandchildren. Naturally I am kept busy, seeing them all and baby-sitting. It is the greatest pleasure of my life. But of course I don't love my husband any less for that. I am always home for dinner and ready to go places with him.

My husband calls home several times a day and is furious if he doesn't get me in. He resents it when I talk about our grandchildren and takes very little interest in them.

Hubert F. — I love our grandchildren just as well as my wife does—but I can't see making a career out of it. Kids are just kids, cute and all of that, but what's the big deal about?

I had looked forward to this time of our lives to enjoy things together. I am in the lucky position where I can arrange my working hours to suit myself. Sometimes I feel like taking an afternoon off. But can I enjoy it with my wife? No!

Clara points out that she is always home for dinner, but it looks to me as though this is just a matter of duty with her. Often she has admitted she is too tired at the end of the day even to talk. When she does talk, it's all just the kids and the kids. I'm fed up.

The Council — In our opinion Clara may be doing wrong in more ways than one.

Her excitement over her grandchildren is understandable, yet it is possible that her children could do with a little less of her time and attention. Their children are their responsibility and they should not be encouraged to be dependent upon an always-available, free baby-sitter.

Clara is wronging herself as well. After a lifetime of child-rearing, she has a right to expand her horizons. Many interesting experiences and activities are passing her by while she relieves her own youth. She can now dare to live for herself.

We have a notion that Clara is somewhat flattered by her husband's jealousy and possibly promotes it by persisting in doing what she knows is annoying to him. Her pleasure in being so sought after is understandable, but she should recognize that her husband has been made genuinely unhappy by this situation. Clara should give up her self-centered childish pleasure in feeling like a belle with an always-filled dance program, for the more adult pleasure of entering a new and different phase of life with her eager companion. New England's thousands of ponds and lakes were formed during the retreat of the continental ice sheet, when glacial debris dammed river valleys and deranged the drainage pattern. As the ice melted, the sea rose and advanced over the coastal lowlands, drowning stream mouths to form the estuaries of present-day Maine's coast.
