Greater Woods Production Need Seen For America

Washington—The Agriculture Department's Forest Service says the nation's expanding population will require nearly twice the present production of wood to meet its needs by the year 2000. "This demand can be met," it said. "But to do so will require a better job of forestry on all forested lands."

The timber situation was outlined in a 700-page, $7 book called "Timber Resources for America's Future," Richard E. McArdle, chief of the forest service, described the report as "the most complete appraisal ever made of the nation's timber situation and probable timber demands by the year 2000."

"If Americans are to have the timber they need in the years ahead, we must begin now to put our forest house in better order," McArdle said. "The potential of the land is adequate."

The report, compiled after a nation-wide survey, cites the "best possibilities" for increasing timber supplies:

- Plant billions of trees instead of millions every year. Some 52 million acres—the size of Maryland, Indiana and Maine combined—need to be planted.
- Step up control of fire, insects and disease everywhere.
- Use more of the timber cut now being left in the woods and at the mill, and more dead and cull trees.
- Keep recently cut lands highly productive.
- A total of 489 million acres of commercial forest land, including all public and private ownerships, now produce the wood used by 174 million people in homes, industry, packaging, and synthetics. The report pointed out that 40 years from now the United States will have to grow 83 per cent more timber—or nearly twice as much—to supply the wood needed by a population expected to rise to 275 million.
- The present timber acreage is all there is; it must grow future needs. Imports are not expected to take up the slack. The present timber acreage may shrink, what with urban communities expanding, more highway, power and reservoir developments.
- "The United States is not faced with an acute short-

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a woman's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Helen J.—I don't want to wait any longer.

Warren L.—I want to be free of debt.

Ellen J.—I am 24 and have been going with a man of 30 for the past three years. We wanted very much to marry shortly after we met, but one thing or another interfered.

There were illnesses and deaths in both our families and naturally we couldn't help putting off our plans because of that. But now I don't want to wait any longer and Warren says he isn't yet ready because of his debts.

I am perfectly willing to work as long as necessary after our marriage, but Warren says it wouldn't be fair to me. It seems more unfair this way.

Warren L.—Ellen just doesn't understand a man's feelings. At 30 years of age a man should be able to marry and support a wife and family. He doesn't want his wife working to pay off his debts.

We are very much in love and I had looked forward to giving Ellen the best of everything. Now we would be starting with less than nothing. That may be all right for a young couple, but it certainly isn't for me.

I figure I should have my debts paid off within the next two years. We would then be able to have smooth sailing ahead.

The Council: Is Warren positive that there will be "smooth sailing ahead" at the end of two years? How can he be when he knows so well the many things that can come up to make the water choppy? If everyone waited for ideal circumstances to marry, marriage would be the exception rather than the rule in our society.

Warren seems to overlook the fact that Ellen will be working anyway during the two-year period he gives himself to pay off his debts. She will work and she won't enjoy any of the security or pleasure of married life. Is this the big favor he is doing for the woman he loves so much?

Although she doesn't express some of the things on her mind, Ellen is aware that when people are very eager to marry, they do so, regardless of money troubles, illness, death or any obstacles. Postponements are sometimes made, but when on thing after another seems to be interfering with a marriage, it is a sign that the relationship is a little rocky.

Warren should try to be more honest with himself and Ellen. Does he really want this marriage? If so, it is time it took place. If not, he should not take up any more of this young woman's time. (Copyright 1958, General Features Corp.)

Iranian Shah May Quit For Love of His Queen

Cologne, Germany. — Queen Soraya hides her secrets of the Iranian court behind an enigmatic smile, but rumors drifted out of the Middle East that the Shah might drop his plans to divorce her and, like Britain's King Edward VIII, abdicate for the woman he loves.

Meanwhile, the half German, half Iranian brunette beauty still is Queen of Iran, despite the fact she is living in exile here with her family.

There were many rumors and reports about the ruler of Iran and the wife who has failed to produce a son and heir to his throne. One report was that the Queen had demanded a "price" for keeping secrets of the Iranian court.

Another report, that filtered out of Beirut, Lebanon, said that the Shah has not signed divorce papers because he is so upset he may quit his throne and run off with Soraya.

When Soraya appears in public, people stare at her for some outward indication of how she feels about the situation. Her demeanor only keeps people guessing.

Two weeks ago the handsome 39-year-old Shah announced he would divorce his childless wife. But there still is no guaranteed version of what led up to the break and what the future holds for the couple.

Sentimentalists say the break was forced upon the Shah by advisers who said political turmoil might break out in Iran unless the Shah produced an heir.

Morse Charges 'Depression Brink'

Westby, Wis. — Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), has charged that the Eisenhower administration brought the country to the "brink of depression" by promoting a "theory of scarcity."

Morse, who spoke at a co-op meeting Saturday night, said "we have more food in America than can be sold at profitable prices through the normal market."

He said the administration's answer to this abundance has been to make scarcity take its place.

"As a result, the nation is now on the brink of depression. Farmers have been there for some time, but the rest of the population is now catching up," he said.
