Nutrition Expert Warns About Homemade Diets

Many "fad" or "homemade" diets will help you lose weight but they do it by cutting down on the wrong foods and by robbing the body of nutrients it must have to stay healthy says Harriet Barto, University of Illinois nutrition specialist.

A good reducing diet includes foods rich in minerals, vitamins and high-quality proteins but are low in carbohydrates and fats, she said. And don't eliminate milk, for the lower the calorie intake, the greater the need for highly nutritious foods.
