Potpourri

Residents of the new Republic of Ghana are intensely interested in the people of the United States — they like our democratic ideas and try to pattern their way of life after that of the United States according to Mr. and Mrs. Peter Rutter, currently visiting in Medford. Mr. Rutter, counselor of the United States embassy for Ghana, is a brother of Dr. Thomas Rutter of Medford.

Racial discord in the United States is watched as closely by citizens of Ghana as it is here, they report. The Rutters report that while the new nation is making excellent progress, a lack of educated citizens to hold positions of responsibility and authority is one of the greatest problems. There are at present two small colleges, but these do not graduate enough students to fill the demand.

The Rutters enjoy life in Accra, the capital, in spite of the hot, humid climate. Mrs. Rutter admitted that she was somewhat worried about orienting into a society where white people are the minority, but added that this had been accomplished quite easily. She works with the women of Ghana in clubs — reports that they are anxious to learn how American women operate their organizations. Social life is completely "mixed," she said, with guests at dinners, receptions and dances being both African and European; all white people are referred to as "Europeans" regardless of the nature of their citizenry.

The Rutter children attend a school where the students represent many races and nationalities, and like it very much, she said. The family also enjoys attending the native "durbars" or ceremonial celebrations, she said. Sometimes a high-ranking chief will be seated on a throne of solid gold, and their native jewelry is usually of solid gold. Mrs. Rutter added. The Rutters have interested themselves in the native arts and crafts, and brought representative pieces to their relatives here. Although the country is rich in gold, for many years shells were used for money.

Mrs. Rutter said she marvels at the skill of the native drummers, and described the drums, which are of many shapes and sizes. For native events, usually the drums are combined with the "rattle type" instruments to provide music.

Mr. Rutter points out that in coming years, racial troubles of the world may be intensified if those of the white races do not realize their true position and responsibilities in a world which is largely peopled with colored races. The exploitation of the colored races by the whites is a thing of the past, he warns, and the colored people are determined to have freedom and to improve their economic positions, he observed.

One bit of reporting on the grand session, International Order of Job's Daughters, held here last week end, came out completely wrong. It was the list of bethels which won prizes for scrapbook entries. This is the correct list—we hope: Bethel 39, Riddle, first; Bethel 18, Myrtle Creek, second; 29, Prineville, third and 42, Oakland, fourth.

Lem Manning, new grand inner guard of the Grand Guardian council, reported that the first place winner was one of the most attractive books ever entered in the annual contest and was judged first without dissent.

Mrs. Harry Bryant, Medford Garden club reporter, wrote in last week to say that one bit of interesting information had been neglected in reporting the club's winning entry in the annual Pear Blossom festival parade. Three sets of twins accompanied the float — Glenda and Linda, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Ponder, 2827 Buckshot road; Dawn and Diana, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Millard Jr., 650 Ellen street, Central Point, and Gary and Glen, sons of the F. W. Robinsons of 932 Winchester avenue.

Women of Sacred Heart Catholic church who worked on the huge rummage sale and auction given yesterday, were jubilant over the results of their "celebrity" department. Mrs. R. E. Randolph wrote to well known men and women of the government, sports and entertainment world, and the replies and articles she received proved highly interesting.

Phil Silvers of TV fame sent an autographed handkerchief and J. Edgar Hoover an autographed copy of his "Story of the FBI." Esther Williams, famed swimmer and movie star sent an autographed copy of a pamphlet and Pat Boone, whose television program is seen here, an autographed copy of his song, "Remember You're Mine."

Original copies of Saturday Evening Post cartoons were sent by Artists Joseph Zeis, John Gallagher and Ted Key, the latter an original drawing of "Hazel" who has provided so many laughs for his fans. Al Capp also sent a drawing.

Thornton Utz, well known artist and illustrator of children's books, sent 15 color prints which must have netted the women a tidy sum. Artist Utz has drawn many SatEvePost covers.

The "loot" also included autographed records contributed by Tennessee Ernie Ford, Jan Peerce and Clara Mae Turner. Ida Lupino, another TV star seen here, contributed a piece of costume jewelry and Mrs. Richard Nixon also kindly responded to the pleas of the money-raisers by sending a pencil and autographed calling card.—O.S.

New Way to Use Make-up
"Changes" the Shape of Your Face!
DuBarry "Contour Make-up" Expert
Here For Consultation

If you've always wished you had that perfect "oval" face, here at last is a chance to do something about it.

Now there's a new way to apply rouge, lipstick and other beauty aids so you create the illusion of more perfectly proportioned contours—minimizing less than perfect features and playing up your own prettiest points! Called "Contour Make-up," it's based on individual analysis to find out which of six basic face types is yours. Then on a diagram which you take home, you are shown a few easy tricks of make-up and hair-styling which can quickly make a world of difference in your looks.

There's no charge for this lesson in how to be prettier—based on this series of charts which show some of the beauty "rights" and "wrongs" you'll learn.

Heart Shape: Rouge worn high detracts from pointed chin and long hair balances wide forehead. Bringing eyebrow out to corner of eye makes upper face seem narrower.

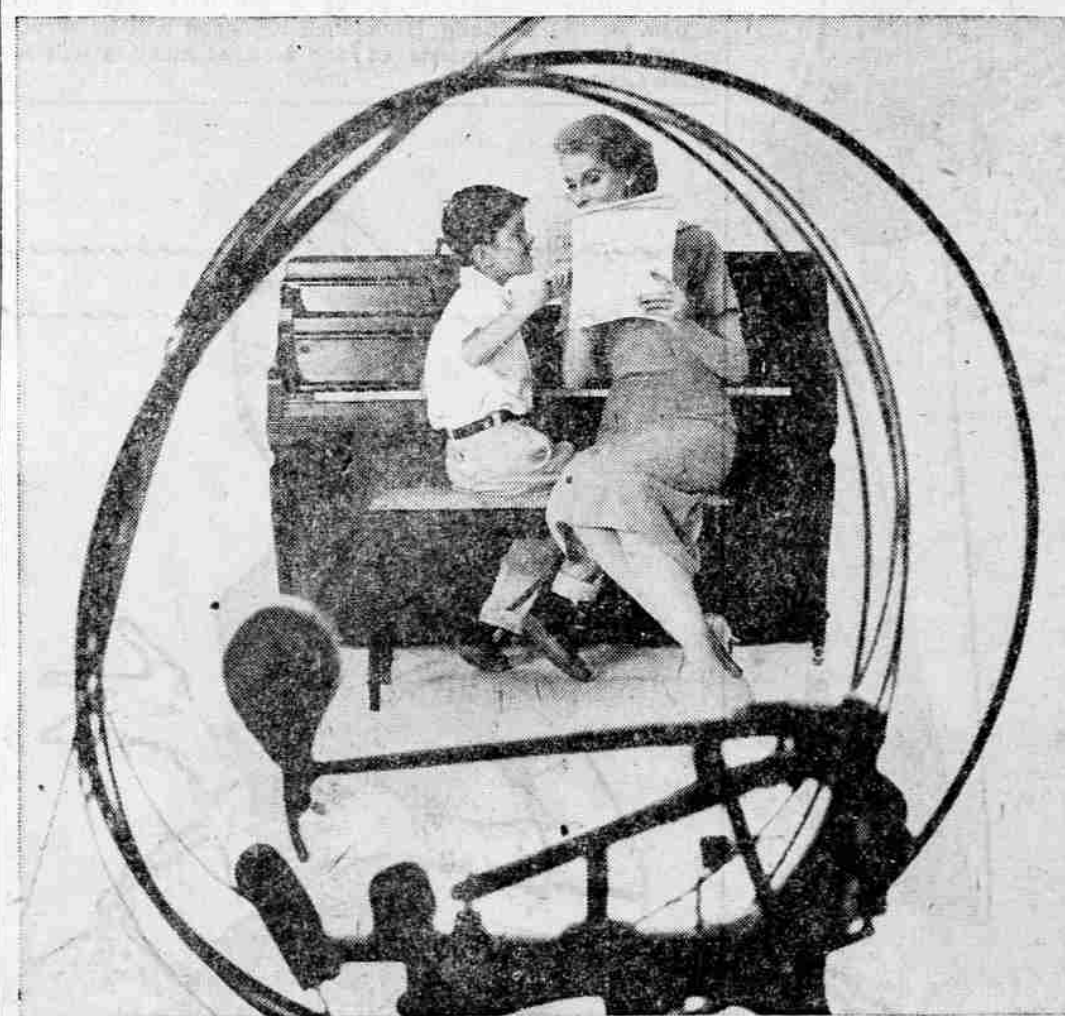

Oblong: Upswept hair lengthens a face that should be shorter. Placing rouge high and raising the lip lines also makes the face appear less long and narrow.

Oval: Even the oval face can be spoiled by improper makeup. Here lips are widened to balance lower part of the face and rouge is placed high and angular.

Triangular: The prominent jaw can be put in better proportion by a large shadow of rouge. Hair worn short and close fills out face where width is needed.

Don't miss this chance for a consultation with the DuBarry Contour Make-up Expert, who will be in our Cosmetics Department all this week.
