Teenagers Are Still Ambitious

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Women's Editor

New York—Around Manhattan: The nation's teenagers seem as ambitious now as when Horatio Alger books inspired them. Their dreams of the future include a college education, homes of their own, and a comfortable income.

Gay Pauley by the time they're 30. A national magazine—Parade, conducted a "predict your future" poll, and received answers from 15,000 youngsters. Fully 96 per cent said they expected to own their own homes; half expect to live in the suburbs; and 75 per cent figures on a home with at least two baths.

Families will be larger. More than two-thirds of the teen-agers said they wanted three or more children.

Two-thirds of the boys, and half of the girls, expected to finish college.

Half of them expected by the age of 30 to be earning from $6,000 to $10,000 a year. The boys said they didn't expect their wives to work; the girls in turn said they planned to, for at least a while after marriage.

Having trouble getting hubby or boy-friend to accept you in a chemise? Well, girls, break him in to it in stages. Designer Hilda Altmark said she had to use the method on her realtor-husband, who informed her early this spring, "Don't let me catch you in one of those things."

Mrs. Altmark's technique follows: Start with a mild form of the chemise, one with a semi-belt, over-belt or conservatively loose back. Shorten skirts to the top of the calf, or a little higher if the legs are exceptionally shapely. "The more you draw attention to your legs, the quicker he'll see that the new clothes have sex appeal," she explained.

Golden apricot sauce spooned over creamy rice pudding makes a luscious spring dessert. Cook dried apricots until soft; add sugar to taste along with a drop of almond extract and a little spice, if you like. For a smooth mixture, puree the apricots after cooking.
