

Musial Paces Card Victory Over Cubs With 2 Homers

By FRED DOWN
United Press Sports Writer

Stan Musial and Ted Williams are sharing the headlines again today—Musial because he's off to one of his best starts and Williams because he's off to one of his worst.

The 37-year-old Musial finally got the St. Louis Cardinals into the win column Sunday when he knocked in four runs with a pair of two-run homers in a 9-4 victory over the previously unbeaten Chicago Cubs. He's collected 10 hits, including four homers, in five games for a .435 average.

The 39-year-old Williams, meanwhile, went hitless in four trips as the Boston Red Sox suffered their fifth defeat in six games—a 10-inning, 6-5 loss to the Washington Senators. Williams' average is now an inglorious .000 after win in six games.

—Robin Roberts beat the enabled the New York Yankees to beat the Baltimore Orioles, 7-0, for their fifth straight game at bats.

In other major developments:

—Bob Turley's four-hitter Milwaukee Braves, 3-2, and equalled Grover Cleveland Alexander's record of 190 wins by a Philadelphia Phillies pitcher.

—Four more "little league homers" were hit in the controversial Los Angeles Coliseum as the Giants butchered the Dodgers, 12-2.

Musial softened up Jim Brosnan, who shut out the Cardinals opening day, with a two-run homer in the first inning and blasted another during the Cardinals' four-run fifth-inning rally. Don Blasingame had three hits for the Cardinals who had lost four straight games to the Cubs.

Roy Sievers broke up the Boston-Washington game when he hit Murrya Wall's first pitch in the 10th inning into the left field bleachers. Sievers also had a triple and a double and Norm Zauchin homered for the Senators, who share second place in the American League with Kansas City.

Turley walked seven batters but struck out eight as he became the fourth Yankee pitcher to go the distance and the second to pitch a shutout. Yankee pitchers now have yielded a total of eight runs and 37 hits in six games—by far the best pitching record in the majors. Norm Siebern homered and Mickey Mantle and Gil McDougald had two hits each for the Yankees.

Roberts Rebounds

Roberts, seeking to rebound from last year's 10-22 campaign, struck out four, yielded five hits and walked none in five innings to contribute three singles to the Phillies' attack. The Braves scored both their runs in the seventh inning when Hank Aaron and Harry Banebrink homered. Bob Rush suffered the loss in his first appearance for the world champions.

Danny O'Connell hit two homers, Daryl Spencer collected a homer, double and single and Willie Mays had a triple and two singles to lead the Giants' 16-hit attack on Don Drysdale and two successors, Ramon Monzant, kayoed by the Dodgers last Wednesday, came back to pitch an eight-hitter and yielded both Los Angeles runs on a homer by Carl Furillo. The crowd of 47,234 made a total of 167,209 for the three-game series in the Coliseum.

The Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the Cincinnati Redlegs, 4-3, in the other National league game while Kansas City dealt the Chicago White Sox an 8-2 beating and the Cleveland Indians hit four homers to down the Detroit Tigers, 4-2, in other American League activity.

Rookie first-baseman R. C. Stevens, who singled home the Pirates winning run in their only other victory this season, homered off Willard Schmidt in the ninth for the Redlegs had tied the score in the top of the ninth when Vada Pinson doubled and scored from third on a sacrifice fly by George Crowe.

Bill Tuttle and Billy Hunter hit three-run homers for the Athletics, who got five-hit pitching from Jack Urban in handing the White Sox their third loss in five games. In contrast to the Yankees, White Sox pitchers have been rocked for 27 runs and 57 hits in five games. Chicago Manager Al Lopez protested the game on the basis of an "interference play" in the fourth inning.

Roger Maris, Rocky Colavito, Minnie Mino and rookie Dick Brown homered for the Indians off 20-game winner Jim Bunning of the Tigers. Ray Narleski went 8 1-3 innings for the victory although strikeout king Herb Score retired the last two batters in the ninth.

publicans asked him about that passage. "If the interview had been quoted in full, as it should have been, perhaps I would have remembered it," he told Krock.

Truman said that he thought Krock "was being used to make a whipping boy out of me."

He added that he regretted "very much" that he had mistakenly denied the interview, "but I still cannot see why it was necessary to dig up dead horses, and situations long since successfully concluded, merely to justify the fact that nothing has been done to correct our present problems."

Krock's reply to Truman, which also was placed in the hearing record, thanked Truman "for your generous act" in requesting that the record be corrected.

"I agree with you emphatically that the Republicans were using me to make 'a whipping boy' of you," Krock wrote.

"And I agree with equal emphasis that the entire paragraph in the 1950 interview that included those two sentences should have been quoted."

Truman Apologizes For Not Recalling Krock Interview

Washington—Harry S. Truman says he made a mistake in telling a congressional committee last Monday that his exclusive interview with Arthur Krock of the New York Times in 1950 "did not happen."

"My memory, like that of many people, sometimes fails to work quickly," the former President said in a letter of apology to Krock.

Truman's letter was placed in the hearing record of the House Banking committee today by Chairman Brent Spence (D-Ky.), who said that Truman "frankly admits he made a mistake" in denying the interview when he appeared before the panel last Monday.

Correctly Quoted

Truman admitted that he was correctly quoted in the interview.

He was quoted as saying that "a certain amount of unemployment, say from three to five millions, is supportable; it is a good thing that job-seeking should go on at all times; this is healthy for the economic body."

In his letter to Krock, the former President said he was "taken by surprise" when Republicans asked him about that passage. "If the interview had been quoted in full, as it should have been, perhaps I would have remembered it," he told Krock.

Is That So?

A peculiar rite performed by the copperhead and some other viperine snakes is what is known as the "courtship dance."

Separated by only a few inches, two snakes — there may be more, some observers say — face each other, their heads a foot or so off the ground. The foreparts of their bodies sway slowly back and forth. They are tense as fencers looking for an opening.

But when the opening comes—and it may be minutes—they do not strike with their deadly fangs. Instead, they strike with their bodies, and the one who forces the other to the ground then chases him away before returning in triumph to the lady.

It is possible, however, that the ending is not a romantic one. Quite likely the encounter, fought with limited weapons, was over hunting rights, and the victor then proceeds to look for other creatures on whom to use his venom.

Certainly he should waste none of it on another copperhead. He needs all he has not only to get food but to protect himself from his enemies. He has many of them—hawks, owls, hedgehogs, foxes, weasels, plus many other creatures in addition to man. And since all of them, but man, want to eat him, his problem is a constant one.

Nonetheless, he has survived quite well so far. He may still be found from southern New England to Nebraska and south to Florida and the Rio Grande. His cousin, pit-vipers, on the other hand, the rattlesnake and the water moccasin have shrunk greatly in numbers throughout the same area in recent years.

Part of the reason for his better survival is his size. He is smaller, with an average length of three to four feet. As a result, man does not hunt him so consistently.

It is also possible that he is making better use of the heat-detecting device pit-vipers have. It is the membrane linking the pits on either side of the head between the eyes and the nostrils. Studies indicate the membrane is sensitive to heat, such as that given off by warm-blooded animals. It may be used as a sort of radar to locate prey.

LA Dodgers Have Some Consolation

By ALEX KAHN
United Press Sports Writer

Los Angeles — The Los Angeles Dodgers, held to two wins in their six games against the San Francisco Giants, drew some consolation today from the financial success of their first home series.

The three-game home stand, which marked the debut of major league baseball in Southern California, drew 167,209 fans. But the Dodgers were able to take but one of these games, the opener Friday.

Sunday it was the same story as Saturday with the Giants finding the range on Los Angeles pitching for numerous base hits. The Sunday crowd of 47,234 saw the Giants pile up 12 runs on 15 hits while the home team was held to two runs on eight hits, with Carl Furillo's homer with a man aboard the only scoring punch.

Saturday the Giants also got 15 hits for 11 runs while the Dodgers were getting four runs on seven hits.

During the three-day stand a dozen homers were hit, eight of them over the short left field wall. But the Giants got eight of the four-baggers to the Dodgers' four.

FIRST GIANT HOMER—Daryl Spencer, of the San Francisco Giants, crosses the plate in the fourth inning, after he hit the first home run in the game against the Los Angeles Dodgers at Seals Stadium in San Francisco, Calif. Congratulating him are an unidentified batboy and teammate Danny O'Connell (19). The umpire is Jocko Conlon, and the Giants won, 8-0.
