Skitter-Skatter Maude E. Hallmer

This is a good game for a group of players. Make a double circle with each player in the inner circle facing a partner in the outer circle. One player stands in the middle and calls, "Back to back!" The players turn so their backs are toward each other. Then he calls, "Face to face!" and they face each other; next, "Side to side!" and they put their shoulders together; "Hand to hand!" and they touch hands as in pat-a-cake. The caller may give these directions in any order. But when he suddenly calls, "Skitter-skatter!" everyone must get a new partner. The caller tries to find a partner, too, and if he succeeds, the one left out becomes the next caller. Of course, if the first caller doesn't find a partner, he continues calling directions and tries again.
