

Family Council

Marian R.—Sue should put an end to this affair.
Sue M.—It no longer matters.

Marian R.—Recently I introduced my best friend, Sue, to my cousin, Ernest. I thought they would hit it off well together.

I was right, but not in the way I had hoped. Last week Sue told me she had been having an affair with Ernest. I never would have believed it of either one of them. I can't understand Sue's being so foolish, but she told me she found Ernest fascinating and irresistible.

I have begged Sue to break off this affair at once. She is a nice girl and this will ruin her. She says it no longer matters, but I think if she goes on this way, things will go from bad to worse. I have threatened to speak to her parents or Ernest's parents to make them stop, but I'm not sure I have the nerve to go through with it.

Sue M.—Marian talks like a child. I am 24 years old—old enough to know what I'm doing and accept responsibility for myself. My parents can't stop me and certainly Ernest's parents have nothing to say about it.

I realize that it was foolish of me to get involved in this way in the first place, but now I'm no longer an innocent girl. I can't see what difference it makes if I go on with this affair.

The truth is I am very much in love with Ernest and believed he had some real feeling for me. I see now I was quite mistaken, so I've decided to settle for whatever brand of affection I can get. I don't expect approval. I just want to know whether or not I'm right in feeling that Marian's outrage and her threats to ring in an alarm are out of place.

The Council: No, we don't think Marian's attitude is out of place. What's more, we don't believe Sue thinks it is, either.

Sue should ask herself why she made this confession to Marian. It was not at all necessary from any rational point of view. One reason may be Sue wanted to do a little "boasting" about her escapade. If this is the case, she is certainly far more childish and less responsible than she likes to admit to herself.

A second reason, and, we suspect, a very likely one, is Sue wants somebody to stop her. She has gotten rather out of her depth in this mess and doesn't quite know how to extricate herself. If she dared, she would perhaps like to tell all to her parents and seek their help.

Sue needs to be far more honest with herself. She is violating her deepest feelings in this relationship with a man who does not even pretend to give her any real affection. She fools herself when she says the continuation of the affair no longer makes any "difference." She knows she runs great risks and the continued brutal assault on her own feelings can do irreparable emotional damage.

Sue wants to talk things out thoroughly with someone. Her girl friend, though a good, well-meaning friend, isn't the best choice. She should instead choose her family physician, clergyman or a competent psychiatrist.

Cardinal Stritch's Arm Amputated

Rome—An Italian surgeon amputated the right arm of Samuel Cardinal Stritch midway between the shoulder and elbow today in a 35-minute operation. The Chicago archbishop was reported in "very good condition."

The 70-year-old prelate received Holy Communion just before he was wheeled into the operating room for drastic surgery necessitated by a blood clot in his right arm.

Pope Pius was immediately informed of the successful operation. Amputation of the cardinal's right arm does not bar him from saying Mass or continuing his functions.

INVALID ROUTS GUNMEN
Knoxville, Tenn.—W. H. Tillery, 79, an invalid, pulled a pistol from under the covers of his bed Friday and chased off two intruders who robbed and beat his wife. The aged man, bed-ridden with a heart ailment for 12 years, shot at the gunmen as they were leaving and apparently hit one of them.
