

SHOOTING SPREE ENDED
—Louis Felipe Marrero arrives in Palsington, Pa., where he will be held overnight, prior to his extradition to New Jersey. Police said Marrero has confessed to the shooting of six people. Three of them Catholic nuns, in Trenton, N. J.

Family Council

Michael P. — My wife can't be dragged from the TV set. Ethel P. — I have no other companion.

Michael P. — Is my wife and I ever get divorced, I'm going to sue the TV set for alienation of affections.

It's not that I don't like TV. I do. But there are limits. My wife is an addict. You can't drag her away from the set. When she's not watching it, she's telling me what she saw on it. She doesn't stop talking about the characters in the different plays.

The worst of it is she asks me all the questions they ask on the quiz shows. When I don't know the answer she says, "You dope — I know that one." I tell her if she's so smart why doesn't she get on one of those shows and bring home a few grand. She keeps telling me she's going to surprise me one of these days. But I haven't been surprised yet.

Ethel P. — It's a good thing I have the TV set, because I sure don't have any other companion. Mike never did take me places. When the children were small I didn't mind, but now they are grown and off on their own, and I would like to go out evenings. All I hear from Mike is "But I'm too tired, Hon."

TV is not only entertaining. It's educational. It's made me realize that my husband, who always claimed to know everything, knows so little he ought to go back to the first grade. No wonder he resents my watching it!

Mike has gotten so jealous of that set, he'll walk into the room and just turn it off while I'm sitting and watching. The last time he did that I threw an ash tray at him. I guess it's getting serious.

The Council: Yes, when my trays get thrown, it's a pretty sure sign things are getting serious.

We do think, however, it is a good sign that Mike has become irked by his wife's TV-watching. It shows he really wants her company. He just doesn't know how to compete with that set.

Now, we know few wives who would say "Sorry, dear, I have to watch TV tonight," if their husbands called up and said, "How about dinner in town tonight and a show afterwards?" We don't think Ethel, despite her TV addiction would be an exception.

On the other hand, we do think Ethel shows too little initiative in finding companions other than her TV set. She should not be totally dependent upon her husband for all social activity. Whether she realizes it or not, the lack of human companionship makes a void in her life. She should seek friends through club or church work.

She might show some initiative in other respects, as well. Most married men look to the home-cooked dinner and the easy chair as a kind of Paradise-on-earth after a hard day. But they can be shaken out of this after-work lethargy by things that really capture their interest. A clever wife will seek out the shows, sports events and social activities that give her husband a lift. Once he gets into the habit of enjoying after-work activity, he'll be willing to compromise and attend events of special interest to his wife.

A good balance of out-of-the-home activities will help to make the TV evenings at home seem more appealing — even to Mike.
