HONEY ON THE HOOF—Jim Clark of Jim Clark's Richfield Service, Sixth and Grape sts., Medford, thought it would be better to buy his honey in a jar than let a swarm of bees make their home behind his station, where a colony planted themselves Friday. Clark got in touch with Rogue valley bee man Delmar Smith, above, who placed the queen in a hive and calmly shooed the rest of the bees inside with his bare hands. According to Smith, the colony has lived for several years in the alley behind the Mail Tribune and every year they have to be collected after they swarm. Clark said they started to make their home in a convertible parked on his lot but the queen apparently was not satisfied with the color of the upholstery and they moved out again. In the picture, Smith holds a smoke can which he uses to make the bees move without exciting them.
