Louisiana Areas Face Flood Threat

Alexandria, La. — A runoff from more than a week of rain raced down the Red river today, threatening a wide strip of low-lying land in central Louisiana with serious flooding.

A crest of 42 feet—10 feet above flood stage—was forecast for the Red at Alexandria next week, and the Weather Bureau predicted "serious flooding."

Concern was shifted to the central part of the state after northern Louisiana battled rampaging waters in many bayous, shoring levees with makeshift dikes and sandbags and evacuating residents of the lowlands.

About 750,000 acres were inundated by floodwaters in north Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana last week.
