

OLD DOG—Shep, a 17-year-old Australian shepherd belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Jack Bezoff, Willow Springs rd., Central Point, doesn't care to chase rabbits anymore. In fact, all he does is lie around the yard now, dreaming of the "good old days" when he was a pup. By human standards he is the equivalent to about 120 years old. Shep also is getting a little deaf and Bezoff, above, had to shout to get him to shake hands for the picture. The dog grew up with the Bezoff children, Terry Lee and Jeannette, who are now 12 and 8 years old, and has lived with the family in Weed and Klamath Falls before they came here three years ago.

Is That So?

Granda—Via TWA — Two things hit me hardest about Granada — The Alhambra and the underground, the latter being strictly non-political. Many of you know more about the Alhambra than I do because you have already read Washington Irving's famous book by that name. I'll read it when I get back. The Spaniards here seem to know it as well as Don Quixote.

But for those of you who haven't read it, the Alhambra is both a fantastically beautiful palace and a mighty fortress covering 35 acres. It is so breathtaking that when I heard the Duke of Wellington refused the gift of it, as "impractical." I thought he must have been out of his head. The Spaniards offered it for his help in driving Napoleon out of Spain.

As for the underground, that is literally what it is. Some 2,500 people—Gypsies, mainly—live there beneath the surface of a section where the Moorish facloners used to live. The reason is they like it. I refused to believe it, even after being in a couple of the caves which actually were clean, spacious and comfortable. Our driver suggested we go to Guadix. We did.

In that town, a few miles to the northeast, there are some 10,000 troglodytes, people who live underground. Homes, stores, taverns, are beneath the surface. Only the steeple of the church sticks out. The chimneys do, too, of course. They are generally tubes of cones of whitewashed brick and mortar that sit a few feet or yards back along the slope. In some cases there is a room on the surface or against the hillside, but usually there is just a door.

One place we entered had 15 rooms, but there are others with 20 or more. The troglodytes maintain their homes are cool in summer, warm in winter, that there is little danger from burglars and the the only thing that can burn is the furniture. Their scale of living seems to vary as much as surface dwellers!

As we drove back to Granada, I tried to imagine myself getting a building permit for such a dwelling in the states. From New Jersey to California, I could see nothing but puzzled disapproval on the faces of building inspectors and health department officials.

THE GILL PERFORMANCE

Senator Gill wrote the legislation in 1957 which removed the authority of the state to levy a property tax.
