The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Diet for Hardening of the Arteries

In release No. 53 by the American Heart Association there is something which will sadden the hearts of all those many men who today are drinking with their meals a little glass of vegetable oil. What is disappointing is that it has been found that, although at first the oil can lower the level of blood cholesterol and even the number of the giant fat molecules in the blood, after six weeks or three months, the blood goes back to the way it was, even though the use of the oil is continued. This report points up what I have been saying all along—that there is not much sense in our prescribing very narrow and markedly fat-free diets until we physicians know much more than we now know. I just read a book by an English physician who says the great increase of late, in heart attacks correlates best with the tremendous increase in our use of sugar!

If We Are to Survive We Must Use Our Best Brains

There is an interesting article by Evelyn Lauter in Family Weekly Magazine on unusually gifted children. I am glad to see that a National Council has now been established for the gifted, a council which will sponsor research, and will advise parents in the education of brilliant students. The central office will be in West Orange, N.J. It will be a clearing house for information for the whole country. Miss Lauter says the idea was conceived by George Douglas Hofe, owner of the Carteret School for Boys, who has endowed the council. With Dr. Cyril Woolcock, principal of Hunter College High school, and professor of education at Hunter college as its chief consultant, the council plans to help school teachers to identify gifted children early enough so that special programs can be developed for them. Already in New York City, three-year-olds in nursery schools are being tested for unusual ability.

Hoover Supports Ike's Defense Plan

New York—J—Former President Hoover has expressed full support for President Eisenhower's defense reorganization plan. Hoover said in a statement Thursday that "Congress passed the first act providing for the unification . . . of the armed services in July, 1947, after prolonged investigation and debate."

Since that time Congress has acted further toward "better unification and improvement of the services," Hoover said.

One common purpose of all these proposals was better unification and a firmer civilian control of the armed services. "That is President Eisenhower's purpose and I support his effort 100 per cent," Hoover said.

In the new schools now being planned for brilliant children, the course will be adjusted to their needs so that they will not be bored, and will not have to be held back. Parents are advised to surround their children with the books they love, and which they will read rapidly. Parents should take the children on walks and try to interpret things for them. They should try to answer all of their questions, even if before doing so they have to do some reading themselves. I know that when my children were young I felt it incumbent on me to try to find good answers to their many questions. Often, when I could not answer a question, the child and I would stop what we were doing and would go to the encyclopedia for help.

Should Appreciate Value
I hope that the time is coming when people will not so often sneer at the brilliant youngsters and call them "eggheads" or "squares." At last we adults should be appreciating the great potential value of these children to the nation. They constitute our greatest source of future wealth.

As I was writing this, I heard that some teacher has been protesting against the new plans for helping brilliant children. He thought this un-American; he thought there should be no discrimination, and hence only one school for everyone. There, I fear, he slipped up, because when one tries to teach a brilliant child in the same class with a number of mentally retarded children, the brilliant child may not get much of a break. The unfortunate teacher has to spend so much of her time helping the children who find it very hard to learn that she may have to ignore the brilliant child. For this her conscience does not hurt her because she knows he can get his lesson in a few minutes all by himself. But then, because of his boredom, he may get into mischief, or he may get to day-dreaming, and as a result, he may be sent home with a note to his mother saying that he is lazy and bad. Many cases are on record in which, because a brilliant child was bored in school and wouldn't study the uninteresting lessons set for him, he was classified as backward!

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail.

Collection of Beer Steins Purchased

San Francisco—J—The nation's largest collection of historic beer steins in private hands recently was acquired by John Rickey, art connoisseur and well known San Francisco Bay area restaurateur.

Rickey bought more than 150 rare steins from Col. Fred Hetherington of Southern California. The oldest is a foot-high glass tankard with a silver lid, made in 1550 in the La-vistz factory near Nuremberg. Another rarity, the Apostles-krug, is a Cruessens stein made of a certain kind of clay near Cologne between 1600 and 1660. It gets its name from the fact that it has the 12 Apostles depicted around the base. Its mate was bought by William Randolph Hearst for $3.00.

Lucretia Borgia had been married three times by the age of 20.
