How to Dress Your Windows

Print, solid sheers combine well.

by Ruth W. Lee, home-furnishings consultant

ARE WINDOWS your decorating Waterloo? Take heart. It's easy to figure out proper treatments once you know how to go about it.

First, consider the purpose, size, and color scheme of the room itself. Then, remember that simplicity is the best dressing for any window.

Generally, ceiling-to-floor draperies are a good choice for hallways and living rooms—more formal rooms. The same sort of window treatment goes nicely in bedrooms with large glass areas, especially when a cornice provides a unifying effect. For more casual rooms, the answer may be sill- or apron-length curtains.

Permit only one striking pattern—no more—in any room. When you make your own, don't skimp—allow plenty of fabric. For the home-sewer, a good rule of thumb is to double the width of the window when determining the amount of fabric to purchase. This allows a full and graceful window dressing. Add 12" to the length for headings at top and bottom.

The varied patterns, textures, and qualities in new fabrics allow even the budget-minded homemaker to add a rich high-fashion touch to any room as she "runs-up" her choice of window magic.

A large window area? Use delicately printed sheer for sense of spaciousness.
