Teamsters Strike Against Produce Association

Seattle — Teamsters Local 174 struck the Northwest Produce association Monday night within an hour after grocery warehousemen had voted to end their strike against the association.

Union and management officials agreed the new strike would mean a continuance of the warehouse tieup that has virtually shut off supplies moving from warehouse to market.

George Cavano, secretary-treasurer of Local 174, said about 415 truck drivers are involved in the new strike. Union officials and the negotiating committee of the produce association will meet Wednesday morning.

The warehousemen, members of Warehouse Drivers and Helpers Local 117, voted 189 to 92 to accept a management offer of wage increases totaling 17½ cents an hour by the end of the year.

The contract provides for a 10-cent hourly increase retroactive to April 1 on straight time only and an additional 7½ cents an hour effective Oct. 1.

Also provided for were vacations of three weeks after 10 years and openings for wage discussions on May 1 of 1959 and 1960.

Washington — James R. Hoffa, president of the giant Teamsters union, announced Monday that the membership has voted overwhelmingly to strike against the Montgomery Ward company, Chicago.

He said no date has been set for the walkout.

Hoffa said the Mediation and Conciliation Service has called a meeting in Chicago May 22 of both company and union officials in an effort to resolve a contract dispute and forestall a strike.

The union's contract with the mail order firm expires May 31. Hoffa said there has been "absolutely no progress" in three days of negotiation late last month and both sides are "very far apart."

The teamsters are seeking a 25-cent hourly wage increase across the board.

The teamsters represent about 21,000 company employees in 63 cities, including Oakland and Portland.

Governors Show Interest In Federal Excise Tax Cut

Miami Beach — State governors displayed a noticeable interest today in cutting federal excise taxes but most appeared unready to advocate general tax reduction, including personal income tax relief, as an anti-recession measure.

The tax issue, still sitting on dead center in Washington, was expected to figure in today's discussion at the 50th annual governors' conference.

Of the governors who have been talking here about taxes, several Republicans and Democrats have advocated reduction or repeal of the excise transportation or both. Only Democratic Gov. Averell Harriman of New York has spoken out for personal income tax cuts.

Democratic Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan said he thought it was too late for general tax reduction to be useful to combat the recession.

But Williams favored repeal of the 10 per cent tax on the manufacturers' price of automobiles to encourage the sale of cars from Detroit.

GOP Gov. Robert E. Smylie of Idaho announced he would ask the conference to go on record for repeal of the transportation tax to "effect immediate acceleration of economic recovery." The federal government levies a three per cent tax on freight and a 10 per cent tax on personal travel.

The conference will decide at Wednesday's closing session whether to recommend such action.

DANGEROUS MASCOT

Nottingham, England — Motorist Malcolm Pearson, 26, was fined $2.80 Monday for having a "dangerous" mascot on the front fender of his car. The mascot was a set of stag antlers.

Galesburg, Ill. — Seventeen bricklayers walked off the construction job at the new Galesburg High School Monday in protest. No ice water, they said.

Dag Hammarskjold, secretary general of the United Nations, addressed the governors at their annual state dinner Monday.

He expressed hope that the U.N. General Assembly, I fall could point the way to an international agreement which would bar countries from laying national claims to outer space.

San Francisco — Three federal agencies will help finance the collection, processing and distribution of blood contributed to the Red Cross by volunteer donors.

Announcement of the new plan was disclosed Monday at the 33rd national convention of the American Red Cross.

The Red Cross emphasized that as in the past there will be no reimbursement made for the blood itself, which must still come from volunteers.

The Red Cross noted that it has spent $3,842,500 since 1948 in supplying federal hospitals with approximately 700,000 pints of blood.

Now the Defense department, the Veterans administration and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare will pay at least part of the handling charges. The Red Cross said the new arrangement will enable it to expand its blood collecting program.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Theresa M. — My husband pampers the children.

Henry M. — She's too strict.

Theresa M. — My husband and I have been married six years and have three young children. Our marriage would be quite happy if it weren't for our many quarrels about the children.

I feel that, as a mother, I know what is best for them. My husband feels he ought to be allowed to do just as he pleases with them, but he has no sense at all about what is best for them.

Every night he comes home with different toys for them and the house is flooded with more things than they can ever enjoy. Henry thinks nothing of waking up a child late at night to give him a kiss or a new toy. He takes the children out on Sunday and exhausts them and gets their stomachs upset with all kinds of treats. Then I have to spend all the next day caring for the child.

Henry M. — I was orphaned at an early age and brought up in my grandparents' home. They were very strict and I had none of the things most children enjoy. I had no sisters or brothers and I have often longed for one I could play with and maybe spoil a little.

Naturally, I want to give my kids some of the things I missed. I feel Theresa is much too strict with them. She is often nervous and yells at them or swats them for no good reason at all.

Whenever I want to do something with one of the kids, Theresa's immediate reaction is "No." If she sees me playing and laughing with the kids, she says they're getting too wild and noisy. She seems to resent my having anything to do with them. After all, they're mine too, and I care about them at least as much as she does.

The Council: Somehow these parents seem to have fallen into the pattern of competing for possession of the children, and that is certainly all wrong.

Henry makes an understandable case out of his reasons for wanting to give his children as much fun as possible. But if Theresa's accusation that he endangers the health of the child is true, it is obvious he has some other selfish motive for his excess pampering.

On the other hand, if there is truth in Henry's accusation that Theresa always tries to restrain his fun with the children, it is obvious she is resentful of something in that relationship.

We suspect each of these parents is egging the other on. Each feels pushed out of the picture by the other and the children are the unhappy victims of this shameful struggle for power.

When parents are in constant open disagreement, children are forced to take sides. The children may begin to think of their mother as a shrew and a kill-joy, or they may think their father is a fool and will suspect his treats are really intended to buy their affections.

They will also dimly suspect they are being used as pawns in a battle they don't understand and they will feel they have been denied their rightful share of parental love.

If they are truly concerned about the children's welfare above all else, Theresa and Henry will discuss their disagreements privately and rationally. It is always possible to arrive at a compromise if there is genuine desire for the welfare of the family on both sides. If there isn't outside help from a physician in order.

Korean Envoy May Tour Oregon

Washington — Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) said today that Pyo Wook Han, minister of the Korean Embassy, will make a three-day visit to Oregon in June to tour federal power dams, receive an honorary degree and discuss adoption of Korean orphans.

Han's schedule will take him to Portland on June 6 where the Corps of Engineers has arranged a tour of Bonneville dam and other federal projects on June 7. He will receive an honorary degree June 8 and the following day he will visit the Harry Holts at Creswell to talk with the couple responsible for adoption of hundreds of Korean war orphans in the United States.

Han will leave June 9 by plane from Eugene for San Francisco.

Agencies To Aid Blood Bank Work

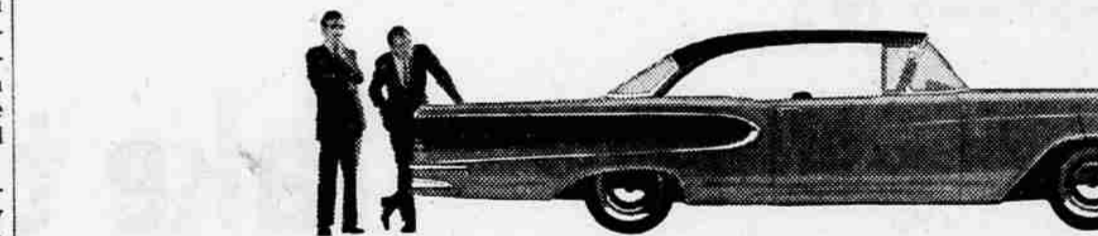

San Francisco — Three federal agencies will help finance the collection, processing and distribution of blood contributed to the Red Cross by volunteer donors.
