Choreographer Must Also Know Photograph Besides Music, Writing

New York—It's no longer enough for a choreographer merely to know choreography. Now, with TV, they've got to dip their toes into music, script writing and photography, says Rod Alexander, one of the busiest toe-dippers around.

"During TV rehearsals, I walk around with a lens finder so I can help plan the camera shots. This is important to a choreographer because many cameramen don't know how to photograph dancing. It's a different world to them.

"Besides knowing about cameras, angles and lenses, a choreographer should know something about music, too—know the two-four beat, three-four and four-four beats," Alexander said.

Dance Should Have Point

When it comes to script writing, Alexander prefers it when the writer includes the dance as part of the story line. "The dance should carry out a point in the story and advance the script. It should fit naturally and when it does, it's easy. But it's tough on us when the writers suddenly indicate words, 'dance here,' and nothing else.

"We go it alone and afterwards the writers come over and complain that the dance is stopping the story."

With his wife, Bambi Linn, Alexander has appeared on some of the most lavish TV shows. They were on the pioneer "Show Of Shows" for about three years, later performed on a half-dozen spectaculars and still more variety shows. All of which means Alexander and Linn know how to handle themselves before the cameras.

"When we're dancing, we instinctively feel if the camera is coming in on us right. If it's too far away, we'll move closer to it. We don't want too much floor showing," said Rod.

Choreographer For Godfrey

Now the choreographer on the jazzed-up Arthur Godfrey "Talent Scouts" show on CBS-TV, Alexander helps keep the new and older talent moving more gracefully. In the summer, he and Bambi will take a 16-member troupe to the Brussels fair to present their ambitious dance revue, "American Dance Jubilee." Then, in October, they start a four-month tour of the United States with the "Jubilee" troupe.

Alexander learned about motion picture choreography when he handled the footwork

Charleston Days Celebration Set

Charleston — The annual Charleston Days celebration on the Oregon coast, sponsored by the Empire-Charleston Chamber of Commerce, will be held May 30-June 1.

Features will include beachcombers, driftwood and bottle hunts, fishing contests, row-boat races, diving exhibitions, rides on the Snug Harbor railroad, and open house and conducted tours at the Fish Co-op.

Queen of the Mermaids will be crowned in ceremonies Friday night at the King Neptune ball in the Charleston school gymnasium. There will be a parade Saturday morning, and boxing matches that evening.

Highlight of the week end will be the salmon bake Sunday from noon until 6 p.m. reviving the tradition for public feasts as they were done in the area in the past.
