Family Council

Kate V.—Harry has no manners at all.

Harry V.—I want to forget myself when I go out.

Kate V.—My husband and I have been married 15 years and have a fine family of four youngsters. On the whole we have a happy marriage, but there is one thing that has always disturbed me very much.

My husband has no manners at all. When we go out together, I am almost ashamed to be with him. He doesn't even hold the door open for me or help me with my coat. He lets me give my own order to the waiter and his table manners are so bad I worry about whether people are watching.

I like to teach Harry to be different, but he resents my criticism.

Harry V.—It is a little late in life for Kate to start acting like a teenager going to her first party. I admit that I'm wrong when I sometimes forget to get the door open before she does, but does that call for a barrage of abuse?

Kate gives me a pain in the neck with all these petty things she is always thinking about. When we are out all she can think about is whether people are looking at us and maybe they are saying something about us.

I like to have a good time when I go out — and that means to forget myself a little bit.

The Council: Many men do not realize that the "evening out" for a woman represents far more than a little diversion.

It is her one opportunity to see and be seen by the world outside her home. That's why she takes so many pains dressing and planning the evening. If she is not seen to the best possible advantage, the evening loses much of its charm, no matter how pleasant the entertainment may be.

It is natural for a man who is constantly among people to take a more casual view of the opinions of others. Nevertheless, many men take great pleasure and pride in making a real event of every evening out with their wives.

Our guess is that such men get a far bigger kick out of the evening because they see their wives glow with pleasure.

However, we think Kate emphasizes her worry about whether "people are watching" because she is deeply hurt by her husband's lack of consideration and commonplace good taste.

When a man opens the door for a woman, he is not only performing a physical service that he is better equipped to perform, but he shows that he is aware of the woman's existence as a human being of the opposite sex. When he neglects this fundamental courtesy, he comes rather close to suggesting that he wishes he were alone.

The same is true of the other basic courtesies Kate mentions. Men give orders to the waiter because it is simpler for one person to give the order and the man is taken to be the host.

Men help women with their coats because it is sometimes a struggle to get into one and reasonable consideration calls for a helping hand. Withholding such help implies an indifference which may be a disguise for actual hostility.

We agree with Harry that on his evening out he should "forget" himself. If he tries to please his wife, we can almost guarantee he will.

HERE'S A

Baking Doz. SECRET

It's the balance of ingredients in baking powder that governs its leavening action. Only when these are scientifically balanced can you be sure of uniform action in the mixing bowl plus that final, balanced rise to light and fluffy texture in the oven.
