Winners of Medals For Two Children's Books Are Listed

The event of the year, in the world of children's literature, is the awarding of the Newberry and Caldecott medals for distinguished writing and illustration of children's books.

While the awards are actually not to be conferred until July 15, at a banquet honoring the winners during the American Library association's San Francisco conference, announcement of the winners has already been made.

The Newberry medal for the most distinguished contribution to American children's literature goes to Harold Keith for "Rifles for Watie," published by the Thomas Y. Crowell company. This is one of the most exciting books published for children in many seasons, a full-blooded novel of the Western campaign of the Civil war and the part played in it by the Cherokee Indians.

Brings Fiction to War

Says the ALA bulletin, "It brings to fiction of this war new material, created originally and imaginatively, with a courageous realism and with a compassion that embraces both sides of the issues involved. The author grew up near the Cherokee country in which his story is laid and obtained the idea and material for his book from research done for his master's degree in history.

Robert McCloskey has been awarded the Caldecott medal for the most distinguished picture book of the year, for his "Time of Wonder." The author-artist describes the Maine island that is home to him with the sense of wonder that is a part of childhood. The beauty of the full-color pictures is in full harmony with the rhythmic text of the book. McCloskey is the first person to have been awarded the Caldecott medal for the second time; in 1942 he won it with "Make Way for Ducklings."

Runners-Up

Runners-up this year for the Caldecott Award are Don Freeman, for "Fly High, Fly Low," a story of pigeons in San Francisco, and Paul Galdone, illustrator of "Anatole and the Cat," by Eve Titus, the story of a little mouse who works as cheese taster in a French cheese factory and succeeds in trapping the owner's cat.

For the Newberry award, runners-up include Mari Sandoz for "The Horse Catcher," Elizabeth Enroght for "Gone-Away Lake," concerning the summer adventures and discoveries of three children; Robert Lawson for "The Great Wheel," and Leo Gurko for "Tom Paine, Freedom's Apostle."

All of the books mentioned above are now available through the branch of the Jackson county library system with the exception of "The Horse Catcher," which is on order but has not yet been received.
