Is That So?

By EUGENE BURNS

Alexandria — The Fayum Oasis is a 770 square-mile garden spot fed by the Nile through a 250-mile-long canal, but I shall remember it especially because of two birds I saw there.

One is known as "the Little Green Bee-eater" who eats practically any bug that flies. I first noticed him as a little blob of gold in a willow tree near an irrigation ditch. It was due to the sun's reflection from his burnished green head.

His total length is ten or 11 inches, thanks to diverging tail feathers that make up about two-thirds his length. His plumage is a vivid green, except for black markings on his chest and near his rather crimson eyes.

As I studied him, he took off in a sweeping, almost swallow-like flight of 40 or 50 feet. When he came back for a landing, there was a brief blur or orange. It was due to a trick of sunlight shining through the transparent green of his wings.

The other bird was a black and white kingfisher, a common bird throughout the Nile Valley.

This one was sitting on the top of a pole stuck in the mud at the edge of a canal we crossed. Unlike so many of our kingfishers there is no brilliance to his plumage. Just black and white, he is perpetually dressed for dining out, his major occupation.

As I watched him, he tipped his crested head slightly then hurled himself at the water to disappear in a splash of spray. It was a miss. He almost immediately took to the air again, circled, then came to a stop some 20 feet above the surface. He kept his aerial stance much like a hummingbird. Except for his head being bent slightly forward, he was in an almost perpendicular position, his wings beating smartly in a dark haze.

Another Try

Then he heeled over and dropped for another try. It was a success. When he reappeared, he had a small fish about four inches long, which he gulped down as he resumed his perch on the pole.

Many Egyptians dislike the bird because they think he kills off the fish. But though they hunt their nests — the kingfishers' burrow two or three feet into the banks to hollow out a chamber — they are rather half-hearted about it. I saw them everywhere, and in one place counted nearly a dozen sitting on a telephone wire.

Because of its poorly developed nervous system, a fish probably experiences discomfort rather than actual pain when hooked.

Parents Vote To Permit Integration

Harlottesville, Va. — (UPI) — Parents of children in a white school threatened with admission of Negroes have voted to permit a "measure of integration" rather than to close the public school, it was disclosed Thursday.

The parents, from the Venable School which has 13 Negro applicants for September and is under court order to accept them, voted 177-128 in favor of integration.

School boards of Charlottesville, Arlington and Norfolk have been ordered to integrate classes and are considering more than 75 applicants of Negroes.

The vote was the first stand taken publicly by parents in the state in behalf of any kind of school integration. Several church groups have opposed a state law that makes it mandatory that public schools be closed if they are integrated.

Three Die As Jet Plane Hits House

Ponca City, Okla.—(UPI)—A flaming jet plane, like a "ball of fire," roared out of stormy Oklahoma skies Wednesday night and crashed into the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Harmon, killing Mrs. Harmon and the two jet pilots.

Harmon escaped, but his wife, Cora B., 68, was killed instantly. Air Force officials identified the T33 jet pilots as 1st Lt. Robert E. Irons, 25, Westbury, N.Y., and 2nd Lt. Christ Poulos, 22, Grand Island, Neb.

Officials at Vance Air Force Base, Enid, said the plane was en route back to Vance from Scott AFB, Belleville, Ill.
