

Rubberized Stones Lined in Decor

Chicago — (UPI) — Wall coverings are being shown with a new, exotic face. Rubberized stones are featured on kitchen walls to add another touch of the outdoors to a wood-paneled kitchen. The stone-like wall covering is also presented as an idea for entrance halls, especially those with wide expanses of glass. Combined with accents of plants, the stone-like walls are truly distinctive.

Potpourri

Saturday — 6 p.m. — Potpourri, Pal Peg, Paul the engraver and various printers in the shop are a weary lot this afternoon. All because the news room had the bright idea of publishing the pictures of the 1958 MHS seniors who won scholarships, honors or awards at graduation. It turned out to be a task which took about four times as long, for everyone, as does the ordinary front page of pictures. One tired printer and Pal Peg, by counting and multiplying, found that there were more than a thousand pieces of metal of various sizes and kinds, in the page. Late Friday night it was discovered that we were one picture short, and it had to be ordered early Saturday, made in a rush and crowded into the layout. It took a long time to get the little lines of type under the right pictures and Pal Peg, poor thing, checked and rechecked the list, with pencils black, blue, red and green, until she has practically every student and his accomplishments memorized.

The page of student pictures is in a way the Tribune's Fathers' day page, for we were sure that the proud parents would rather see pictures of sons and daughters than their own. For weeks Potpourri has been saving a little story for today. One small boy asked his older sister "What's Fathers' day for?" And big sister replied, "Oh, it's just like Mothers' day except you don't spend so much money."

Never having eaten the Japanese dish, sukiyaki, Potpourri sat up late along with a number of other guests of the A. C. Pierce family in order to sample it. As prepared by Mrs. Pierce and Mrs. Mary Fujimoto, it was good.

Mrs. Fujimoto, who has assisted Mrs. Pierce with oriental cooking in the past, prepared the big trays of raw vegetables and meat, and this was cooked at the table in electric frying pans. (The Japanese traditionally use a sort of chafing dish, we are told). The platters contained small thin slices of beef, sliced onions and tops, celery, water chestnuts, green pepper, Japanese mushrooms, button mushrooms, soy sauce and little rolls of bread-like stuff made from Japanese rice flour. These were all cooked together in the hot pans, and seasoned with sugar and soy sauce — no other salt is used.

With this were served pots of hot tea and pitchers of soy sauce. New to us was the practice of breaking a fresh egg into a little bowl, stirring it with chopsticks and then dipping the bits of cooked meat and vegetable into the egg and thence into the mouth. The meat and vegetable should be very hot.

After instructions from Claude Haggard and Mrs. Pierce, the society editor finally managed to get some food into the mouth with the chopsticks — even the steamed rice. Every guest was asked to remove his shoes before entering the dining room, and all sat on the floor. The Haggards and Pierces all enjoy oriental food and serve it often, using the chopsticks. Mrs. H. confessed that sometimes the neighbors think this practice is a bit strange.

For dessert Mrs. Pierce served chunks of fresh fruit and crisp little oriental sweet cakes which had a delicious new flavor. The editorial palate enjoyed the new food very much, but the editorial knees protested, even unto the following day.

College students and their parents paid out twice as much for tuition, books and living costs during the school year of 1957 as they did in 1939-40, according to Changing Times. Full time students in public colleges spent about $1,500 a year, compared with only $747 in 1939-40. In private colleges, costs went up from $1,023 to $2,000.

According to the Journal of the American Association of University Women, an estimated 50,000 of America's ablest high school graduates do not go on to college. In spite of the increasing numbers of scholarships, says the Journal, the reason is inability to finance a higher education. The National Education association has also reported that the number of persons receiving bachelor's degrees decreased from 434,000 in 1950 to 287,000 in 1955.

Mrs. Neil Davidson, home from Europe where she attended the fair in Brussels, reported an interesting conversation with a Russian. According to the Russian, his countrymen attending the fair were more interested in one article than anything else. Guess? Shack Causes Zig On Video Screens

Benton Harbor, Mich. — (UPI) — Puzzled authorities finally found out what was causing the zig on local television screens where there should have been a zag. Source of the trouble was a small shack in the middle of a nearby farm.

Inside the shack is Civil Aeronautics Administration equipment to guide air traffic to and from Chicago. The CAA said TV signals bounced off the metal skins of airplanes as the radio equipment guided them directly over the area.

Salary Embarrasses Township Treasurer

Detroit — (UPI) — William W. Muare Jr., treasurer of Brownstown Township, noting that his salary is one per cent of every tax bill collected and has increased from $2,500 a year to $7,500 in the last 16 years, reported to the board he was embarrassed about being overpaid.

Grateful board members hailed him for his public spirit, agreed to his request for a reasonable set salary and offered to help him circulate petitions so the matter could be settled in an amendment on the next ballot.

Jeweled Garters New Fad

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

New York — (UPI) — The longer the chemise stays in style, the happier are one bustling garter manufacturer and one conservative jewelry store on Fifth avenue.

The two, figuring that the abbreviated hemlines of the chemise focus new attention on legs, have combined to revive a fad from Grandma's day. Gems for our gams.

Tiffany's, recalling that jeweled garters enjoyed a boom in the 1880's, decided they were just the thing for fall, 1956. The store reasoned that the short, slim skirts show more leg, especially when a woman's getting on a bus or out of a car, and that some decoration would help.

The store provides the jewels and Mrs. Hortense Hewitt the manufacturer, makes the garter setting. Presumably, the well-heeled male will carry on from there for some of the garters cost as much as $12.000.

"Let's face it," said Mrs. Hewitt, "a garter is a sex attraction. When a man knows a woman has one on, he won't rest until he sees it."

Mrs. Hewitt, an affable woman who got into the garter business during World War II, claims to turn out more garters than any other manufacturer — some 25,000 dozen pairs a year. Many of these are bought for brides, and come in traditional blue and white.

But come fall, her line will include budget-priced jeweled garters, with detachable clips or pins of rhinestones and other fake gems.

Tiffany said its files showed that in the 1880's, an average December sale would be 500 pairs of garters, costing anywhere from $2,000 to $5,000 a pair.

The fad spread then, as Mrs. Hewitt hopes it will this fall, to less expensive numbers decorated with silver r buckles, antique coins or enameled flowers.

The jewelry firm said one of its best sellers in the other garter era was a band of ribbon inscribed "honi soit qui mal y pense" evil unto him who evil thinks. These were the words of King Edward III to a titting court through in the 14th century, when Edward's dancing partner lost her garter.

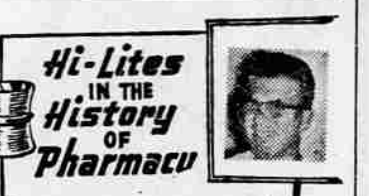

Edward gallantly picked it up, put it on his own leg, and thus England's "Order of the Garter" was founded. The garter became a badge of chivalry, with knights in jousting tournaments wearing their ladies' garters on their sleeves.

Peach Shake

Summer brings milk shake season! For a luscious frosty drink, combine juicy canned cling peach slices with milk, ice cream and a pinch of grated lemon rind. Whiz smooth in a blender. Delicious!

Sandwich Spread

Chopped ripe olives combined with chopped ham, celery, onion and mayonnaise make an excellent sandwich and appetizer spread. Add prepared mustard to suit your taste.
