Neuberger Sees Bill Approval as Northwest Break

Washington — (UPI)—Sen. Richard L. Neuberger said Monday Senate Commerce Committee approval of his bill to give the Fish and Wildlife Service voice in Federal Power Commission licensing procedures is a major breakthrough in our efforts to safeguard the migratory salmon and steelhead runs of the Pacific Northwest.

The bill would require Interior Department consent to proposed fish protection devices in any dam licensed by the FPC. It is scheduled for Senate action this week.

Neuberger's proposal was reported out by the Commerce Committee in an amended version stating "No license affecting fish and wildlife resources shall be issued until the plans of the dam or other structures affecting such fish and wildlife resources have been approved by the secretary of the interior."

The bill was introduced by Neuberger following recommendations of a dam on the Snake River at the Nez Perce site. The proposed 700-foot structure would be below the mouth of the Salmon river. More than 90 per cent of the spring Chinook salmon runs of the Columbia river basin are in the headwaters of the Salmon, main tributary of the Snake River, he said.

About one-third of the world's land area was once covered by forests.

GUARDING VOICWAYS WITH AIR—how we pump telephone cables full of dry air to make phoning more reliable for you

As your phone calls flash through many of today's telephone cables, they're protected by dehydrated compressed air. Reason: If even a tiny bit of moisture gets inside a cable it can interrupt your service, perhaps ruin the cable. So phone men like Bill Hamilton, top picture, keep cables filled with dry air. This shuts out moisture. The air does another job, too. Should much escape, the drop in air pressure sets off an alarm. This helps us find the damage fast, heads off possible trouble before it affects your calls. Using compressed air to protect cables is another way we bring you better, more dependable service. Service you enjoy more because you can always count on it.
