Better Sell Bonds, Head of New York Exchange Firm Says

By ELWOOD C. WALKER
UPI Financial Editor
New York—(UPI)—Better sell bonds, says Arthur Wiesberger, head of the stock exchange firm that bears his name.

He doesn't expect an early decline in the bond market comparable to the first half of 1957, but he thinks that bond prices will sag over a period of months and then resume their long-term downward trend, probably some time next year.

Last September, this expert said "Better buy bonds." That was a time when money rates were rising in favor of bonds and the bond market was getting into a rise that was carried on for some time.

Bonds are the sharpest record with interest rates in their sharpest decline on record, according to Wiesberger.

"We have been in a broad decline of bond prices since 1946 and we see no reason for believing the long term trend has ended," says this expert.

Long Term Downward

"There have been, so in 1953-54 and recently, rallies against the trend, and there will be more, but the long term trend is likely to continue downward, and the recent rally has about run its course."

"The very weight of Treasury offerings in the period ahead will act as a damper to further advances in bond prices, and the Treasury will endeavor to extend maturities at every opportunity. Once business activity revives, late this year, or early next, the corporate demand for funds will again start to rise."

"Stocks are, of course, more attractive and more efficient long term investments than bonds; but the latter can afford temporarily favorable and profitable, havens for investment, so in recent months."

Wiesberger does not believe there is reason for expecting an early decline in the bond market comparable to that of the first half of 1957. But he believes that the bond prices may sag over a period of months and then resume their long term downward trend, probably some time next year.

Continuing Inflation

At the same time Wiesberger anticipates continuing inflationary trends over the years. These alone would work against the bond market and in favor of stocks.

He admits that his view does not rule out the prospect of sizable reactions and declines, as the past quarter century has demonstrated.

"But it still appears part of wisdom, when making selections for long-term holding to emphasize industries, corporations and stocks in a position to benefit from, rather than

NO SERVICE

Syracuse, N. Y.—(UPI)—Two customers, Archibald Brown and Glenn Allen, noted the light burning in the N. & R. Restaurant and went in for a late night cup of coffee. They sat down at the counter and waited. And waited. An hour later cafe owner James Moran showed up to lock up the restaurant, something the cleanup man had forgotten to do.
