Burlington, Vt. (UPI)—Pilots Harry Mitchell, 34, and Leslie Myers, 32, were fined $5 each for flying low over Sherburne Bay and scaring ice fishermen. They said they were looking for an alternate landing field as their strip was too covered with snow. They also complained that the fishermen threw snowballs at the plane.

A MISTAKE

Ovarian Extracts Used For Menopausal Flushes Do Not Produce Cancer

So often I am distressed when I see an unhappy woman suffering from the terrible flushes of a hard menopause. Perhaps several times a night she finds herself sitting up in bed with the sweat pouring off her. I ask, "Why aren't you taking an ovarian extract of some kind? It could probably bring you great relief."

And her answer is, "Yes, my kind doctor at home gave me 0.5 mg. of stilbestrol a day, and with that I was so much better. But then my gynecologist found out what I was taking, and he was horrified; he made me quit it, because he said it could give me a cancer of the breast. And that is why I am now getting so little rest and sleep; I am nearly out of my mind."

Now, why did the gynecologist so fear the ovarian extract? I have asked dozens of doctors about this fear, and few of them could give me any logical reason for it. A few traced it back to some work done years ago with mice. These tiny mice, for all their lives, were given huge doses of the estrogen, and some of them developed cancer. Obviously, the conditions of this experiment were not at all comparable with the conditions in menopausal patients, where a woman — so enormously larger than a mouse — for only a small fraction of her life, gets a daily dose of perhaps stilbestrol—a dose so small it can hardly be seen with the naked eye.

For many years I have been prescribing estrogens for women in the menopause and as yet I haven't seen any case in which I thought a cancer had been produced by the drug. Also, as I travel about the country, I keep asking distinguished teachers of gynecology if they fear the use of estrogens at the menopause, and most of them tell me, "No."

A few years ago some British experts on cancer wrote a book in which they told of their experiments with estrogens given to small animals. These experiments took away their fear of the production of cancer, and they said that there was no chance at all of producing it, if the taking of the medicine was occasionally interrupted for a few weeks.

Recently, doctors who have been giving huge doses of estrogens to old people whose spine has softened and caved in, remarked at a convention that, with the big doses, they had not yet seen any production of cancer. The other day it was shown that large doses of estrogens given to hamsters (rat-like animals) could produce cancer, but only in males, never in females! Hence it is that I feel strongly that we doctors ought to get over our old fear of estrogens in the treatment of the menopause. I do not believe we ever had any good justification for the fear.

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail.
