Plastic-Coated Eggs May Be On Market

Madison, Wis.—(UPI)—The housewife soon may be stocking her refrigerator with plastic-coated eggs.

Flora Hanning and Marjrie Cox, home economists at the University of Wisconsin, have discovered that eggs dipped in a plastic solution don't lose weight, as the ordinary variety does, and don't get the acid taste that comes from storage in a warm place.

The two experimented with 150 fresh eggs and dipped half of them in a solution of chlorinated rubber, wax and several chemical ingredients. Then they stored all the eggs in a warm room without temperature regulation.

After a week, the non-treated eggs had a "rotten egg" taste but the coated ones were still fresh. And the old-fashioned batch lost as much weight in a week as the plastic coated eggs did in a month.

The world's most expensive sales talk

Door-to-door peddlers are now selling vitamin preparations and nutritional supplements. Good for what ails you, and all that. Here's the danger. You may buy the peddler's vitamins "for what ails you" and postpone that visit to your physician you were planning. And that can be dangerous. Dangerous to your health—your most precious possession. That's why the door-to-door peddler's sales talk can be expensive. Tragically expensive. For advice on vitamins or nutritional supplements, see someone with professional knowledge of such things—your family physician or pharmacist.

Trends in Food Outlined By OSC Home Economist

Corvallis — Consumers are buying more food, paying more for it, eating more meals in restaurants, and enjoying more marketing services than ever before, according to Mrs. Elvera Horrell, Oregon State college economist.

Some of the reasons that people are spending more for food and services are explained by Mrs. Horrell. Retail food prices are up, she says, because both farm prices and marketing charges have increased in the past year. People also have more money, are willing to spend more for extra services, and enjoy the luxury of eating more meals in restaurants.

Although food costs are higher today, people are spending about a fourth of their incomes for food, the same as in other recent years. However, Mrs. Horrell points out, if shoppers bought only the same amounts and types of food as those bought in the prewar years from 1935 to 1939, each person's food bill would amount to only 16 per cent of his disposable income.

As incomes increase, people usually buy more expensive foods, and more convenience in the form of processed, prepared foods.

A smaller share of food is being produced at home nowadays as people depend more on store-purchased items, she says. A department of agriculture survey shows that 18 per cent of the food used was home-produced in 1942, compared with only 8 per cent in 1935.

Behind higher retail food prices are increases in both farm prices and marketing charges is due mostly to the higher cost of assembling, processing and distributing farm-food products.
