

Reynolds Says Red Aluminum Producers Try to Undersell U.S.

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Correspondent
Washington — Reynolds Metals company, one of the major aluminum producers who have plants in the Pacific Northwest, claims that Russia is now moving into the world aluminum market with plans to undersell U. S. producers.

In the firm's employee magazine, Reynolds devotes an entire issue to a special article in which it warns of the impact of Russia's action by saying:

"This has hurt. There are indications that, unless means are forthcoming to combat the Soviet actions, we will be hurt more."

Details Hard to Fill
The company said details of the Russian aluminum industry were hard to find. But it was plain that in moving into the world market, the Soviets have sold mainly in Europe, India and Argentina.

"In the past three years, more than 80,000 tons of Russian aluminum has hit the world market. There is a pattern; it appears in large quantities sporadically. It is priced to undersell all existing suppliers," the article stated.

"Since the aluminum industry in Russia is nothing but an arm of government, the price for which it sells bears no relation to the cost of producing it. Slave labor or low-wage workers, state-owned bauxite mines, state-owned transportation, state-owned plants and equipment... no interest, no taxes, no accounting.

Price Unknown
"No one knows exactly how much it costs the Russians to produce a pound of aluminum. All we know is that they have been selling it at whatever price will beat the free world producers."

Reynolds said this is tough on America's free enterprise aluminum makers because "the fortunes of the American aluminum market are tied to the conditions of the world market."

Reynolds ties this aluminum export program of the Soviets to the success of their Sputniks. It reasons that the advent of the guided missile age has reduced the demand for aluminum—mainly for airplanes—and so the Russians have turned to using aluminum as a weapon in the battle for foreign markets.

Continued Producing
"Significantly, the Russians did not to our knowledge cut back production to adjust to the new situation. They continued producing and expanding. Aluminum, until 1955 used to make their weapons, had now become a weapon."

Reynolds says that in 1955 Russia produced 16 per cent of the world's supply, the U. S. produced 46 per cent, Canada 18 per cent and Europe 18 per cent. By 1960 the firm estimates U. S. will produce 43 per cent, Canada 19 per cent, Russia 18 per cent and Europe 15 per cent.

The company produced a map showing a dozen reduction plants in Russia and 13 bauxite mines within the Soviet borders.

It noted that the new ambassador from Moscow to Washington, "a charming, smiling, soft-soap salesman, Mikhail Menshikov, is an expert on trade. It quoted a Russian who defected to the West as having said Menshikov advised economic officials going to East Germany as follows: 'Political Profit'

"Dress tastefully, live in the best house, drive a fine automobile, entertain many foreign guests, make influential friends and always be kindly and polite. Only thus can you gain economic profits, and, what is more important, political profit."

Last month Soviet Premier Krushchev sent President Eisenhower an eight-page letter listing many items the Russians would be willing to exchange under a new trade agreement. On the list of "wanted" items, Russia listed equipment for rolling non-ferrous metal. Reynolds wants to compete with rolled and fabricated aluminum, as well as with aluminum pig.

The company concluded its article:

"America has taken measures to counter Russia's biggest threat. Now it must take steps to defend itself against the left jab of economic warfare."

Amman—The innumerable remains of ruined settlements in the Jordan Valley area have one thing in common from Roman times, some kind of water system.

Yesterday, for example, we came across the remains of a settlement that had only a few traces of foundations and a large cistern, about 40 feet across. A small stream, four or five inches deep, flowed out of it to disappear in the scrub on its way to the lower reaches of the Jordan.

We came on the place so quietly that we frightened a loon or grebe, probably the latter. The bird dove, swam to the far side of the pool

Tokyo Rose Not To Be Deported

San Francisco—(UPI)—The U. S. government Thursday gave up efforts to deport Mrs. Iva Toguri d'Aquino, the Tokyo Rose of World War II.

Immigration director Bruce Barber announced that a deportation warrant against her has been cancelled in view of recent decisions by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The warrant was issued Jan. 27, 1956, but Barber said proceedings were delayed to await clarification of the law by the high tribunal. Under a recent decision, he said, she did not lose her citizenship prior to her treason conviction. Since she was a citizen at the date of her last entry into the country, Mrs. D'Aquino is not now deportable under the warrant, he said.

Father Disappears With Cash; Family Of Eight Stranded

Sun Valley, Calif.—(UPI)—Troubles of the Hill family, revealed last week when two older sisters "kidnaped" their baby brother to prevent his adoption, mounted today. The father of the family had disappeared.

Authorities said the father, 44-year-old ex-convict Lyle C. Hill, had skipped with $300 donated to the family, leaving his wife, Virginia, 42, and their eight children jammed into a tiny, rented home.

Mrs. Hill said her husband left after an argument about whether he should take one of the three jobs offered him by sympathetic persons who heard of the family's troubles.

She said Hill, a carpenter, didn't want to take any of the jobs because of the baby of the family, Mike, 20 months.

Mike was taken by his sisters, Sandra, 16, and Gigi, 13, June 29 after the girls heard their parents talking about giving up the boy for adoption because there was not enough food in the house to feed the large family.

The "kidnapers" and their little charge were found the next day sleeping under a tree in Burbank, about 30 miles from their home. News of the incident brought offers of aid.

Hill promised he would make every effort to keep Mike and support the family.
