

Sen. Morse Says Ike Made 'Sorry, Historic Mistake'

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Correspondent
Washington — Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) criticized President Eisenhower's dispatch of marines to Lebanon Tuesday, But Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) gave the President his support.

Speaking in the Senate, Morse said Eisenhower "has made a sorry and historic mistake this morning. That flag should come out and those American boys should come out; United Nations forces should go in to keep the peace under the United Nations doctrine, not under the Eisenhower doctrine."

"Grave Mistake"
Morse said it is a "grave mistake" for the U. S. "to undertake unilaterally, or even in conjunction with Great Britain, to interfere with Overy development in the world that appears to run counter to some interest of ours. We cannot direct our own liking by force of arms all the forces of growth and change that are now on the loose in the Middle East, South America or anywhere else."

"I am for taking a stand through the United Nations for a United Nations force and for the free nations of the world making it clear that we stand united behind the ideal and the goal of peace," Morse concluded.

Neuberger said although "many mistakes had been made in the past this was no time for political incriminations."

Liberal To Truman Decision
"This is similar to the decision of President Truman to go into Korea," Neuberger said. "If he had not moved into Korea, we would not have had a Korean war. If he had not moved into the free world, we would not have had our political and economic situation in the Middle East," Neuberger concluded.

Progress Reported In Engineer Strike

Portland — (UPI) — "Some progress" was reported by a federal mediator today in attempts to settle a strike of Operating Engineers against Associated General Contractors which has tied up heavy construction work in Oregon and Southwest Washington. The two sides met about four hours Tuesday afternoon. A mediation session between AGC and the Teamsters Union, which joined the strike Monday, was scheduled for today. Meanwhile, the Laborers Union, which struck AGC in May, filed suit in Federal Court against AGC charging employers had caused a "cessation of work," violating a contract. The laborers asked $44,000 in damages.

Boice Promoted To Highway Job

Salem — (UPI) — Charles A. (Chuck) Boice will be promoted from assistant manager of the Traffic Safety Division of the Motor Vehicle Department to public relations officer for the State Highway Department, it was announced today. Gene Huntley, director of personnel for the Highway Department, said Boice would take over his new duties next week. Quivering Driver Tells Flash Cause

Dallas, Tex. — (UPI) — A stupendous flash of light engulfed most of Dallas county Tuesday night, Sheriff's deputies and police officers scurried about suburban Irving to see if they could be of help at the scene of what they thought was a major explosion. The lawmen discovered a quivering, shocked dump truck operator. The operator, new on his job, said he had been thinking of a way to get rid of a large quantity of waste magnesium and dumped it into a burning trash pit. The highly inflammable magnesium instantly ignited, sending a brilliant white glare high in the sky.

Rep. Charles O. Porter (D-Ore.) said he had "grave doubts about the propriety or the necessity of the president's action."

"We should have taken the matter up with the UN first and worked with the UN if there was a threat to the peace," Porter said.

Holmes Protests Bill Amendments

Salem — (UPI) — Gov. Robert D. Holmes today protested what he called "emasculating amendments" to the Klamath Indian timberland bill passed unanimously by the U. S. Senate in May.

In a strongly worded telegram to House Speaker Sam Rayburn and Congressman Clair Engle, chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Gov. Holmes asked that the House sub-committee return the bill to its original form.

The governor said proposed amendments would result in a great resource being disposed of on a "fire-sale" basis.

Amman — We were sitting in the shade of a rock watching some ants five or six feet away.

There were only a few of them in the clean-swept, saucer-like depression, surrounded by a carefully molded ring of sand, and even they seemed to feel the heat as they slowly approached the hole marking the entrance of their underground home.

As I wondered what they found to live on in the desert, an Englishman next to me tossed down a few seeds he had stripped from a nearby bush. Almost immediately an ant appeared and examined the seeds. Seconds later more ants swarmed out of the hole, grabbed the seeds and carried them underground. In three or four minutes the saucer was bare again.

The ants were such notorious grain hoarders, my companion said, that the Talmud had laid down rules on how ant grain hoards should be divided by men. If any ant granary was found in a cornfield it belonged to the owner of the land. But if the discovery was made after the reapers had passed, then the owner got only the lower part of the heap. The upper part had to be given to the poor.

What the ants do with the grain is to store it in special chambers until it is completely dry. That done, they cut the grains up, converting the stuff into a kind of paste by the addition of saliva. That, in turn, is dried until it becomes a dark, crumbly bread of pinhead size or a little larger.

Ant Calls for Help
As we sat there, I inadvertently disturbed part of the sand ring with my foot. Seconds later an ant appeared, appraised the situation and called for help. A stream of workers joined him and set about the task of restoration.

Many of them seemed to back into the job, digging rapidly with their front legs and throwing the sand behind, puppy-fashion. Others lowered their spade-shaped heads into the sand and walked backwards, pulling the grains with them toward the rim from which they had been removed. Yet other ants, apparently confronted with larger grains, scooped them up in their mandibles and dumped them in the breach.

In less than a quarter of an hour the job was finished and the ants were gone. (Released by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Sack Dress Makes For Safer Driving

Charlotte, N. C. — (UPI) — At least one group favors the sack dress.

"We like the sack," said Thomas B. Watkins, president of the North Carolina State Motor club. "It's what we need for safer summertime driving."

Watkins said that ladies wearing shorts, especially short shorts, were a traffic hazard because the shorts distract the attention of drivers.

Last summer, he said, the club reported the traffic accident rate was going up alarmingly because shorts were getting shorter.

The club even issued a request to girls to wear shorts only in their backyards, away from the view of motorists.

"Now," Watkins said, "Thanks to the clothes designers, the trend is to the other extreme, perhaps in the interest of highway safety. "The problem is, so to speak, in the bag this summer."

Shipping, Aircraft Worked of Test Plan
