Plains States Brace for More Flood Threats

United Press International Warring weather systems erupted in a new round of thunderstorms in the flood-stricken Plains States during the night and sent tornado funnels darting across three states.

Missouri and Kansas, where flood damage has mounted into the millions of dollars, braced for additional flood threats today in the wake of weak end storms.

Weathermen said the Missouri river was expected to crest at 31 feet, six feet above flood stage, at St. Charles, Mo., Tuesday. The Mississippi river at St. Louis was slated to crest at 30 feet, its highest level since 1952.

Twister Touches Ground More than a dozen twisters or tornado funnels swirled across sections of Kansas, Colorado and Wyoming Sunday night. A twister touched down near Cheyenne, Wyo., but caused no damage.

One twister struck near Weskan, Kan., Sunday night, injuring one man and damaging several farm buildings. Weskan is near the Colorado line.

The floods in Kansas and Missouri were blamed for at least two deaths during the week end and two other persons were missing.

About 100 residents of the Central Missouri towns of Cedar City and Mokane abandoned their homes Sunday night as the Missouri river overflowed in the area. Numerous roads in Kansas and Missouri still were blocked by floodwaters.

SPRING FOR PEACOCKS Santa Barbara, Calif. — (UPI) — It may be summertime for people but for peacocks it's spring when a male peacock's fancy turns to thoughts of love. That's Bob Byer's explanation for reports to the sheriff's department that strange peacocks are invading new neighborhoods. Myers knows about such things. He's superintendent of the Humane Society.
