

Intervention in Lebanon Ranks Among Astonishing Operations

By JACOB V. FOX
Special Staff International Editor
—(UPI)—Intervention in Lebanon must rank with the most astonishing operations of military history—an American civilian can inspect the country by taxi and meet warmly warm welcomes on all sides.

The situation wherein the Lebanese and the rebels are leaning over backward to avoid starting fighting. So that is. But everyone is holding his breath lest some clash—accidental or otherwise—set off bloodshed.

The main impression a newcomer gets here is one of the ludicrousness of the situation and a sort of amusement. Come along with Abdullah, an English-speaking Beirut taxi driver, and let's tour the city that has put the whole world on edge.

Takes One by Surprise
Abdullah maintains a running commentary and it is with sudden concern you realize what he is saying is that this is the rebel-held section of the city, that snipers stay in top windows and it is a "very bad place."

But then you begin to get the hang of it and can tell yourself whether you are in the rebel section or those patrolled by the Lebanese army. It is simple because you go past sandbagged guard-posts and through barbed wire barricades thoughtfully left open wide enough for cars to pass.

One minute you are looking uneasily at a Lebanese soldier leaning indolently on a rifle and the next you are looking even more uneasily at a civilian in a white shirt with a rifle slung over his shoulder. He is a rebel.

Sees Chamoun's Home
Abdullah casually drives past the home of Seeb Salem, the rebel chieftain, then down the hill toward the heavily-guarded residence of Lebanon's President Camille Chamoun.

Then out on the airport road south of the city to reaches and sand ridges where Marines are sprawling beneath tents for miles in the hot sun. They have little to do. The Marines are glad to see you and the first question from most is "What is going on at home? What do people think of this?"

The view of Lt. Gary Gilson, Waterbury, Conn., is typical. "Every night as we lie here we wonder what is going to come of it all. We wonder if we can work this thing out without shooting. All of us hope we can and can get out of here."

Dr. Wells Leaves For Africa Study

Ashland — Dr. Wayne W. Wells, Southern Oregon college professor of science, emeritus, left Ashland last week on the first leg of a trip to Africa where he will conduct a number of plant research projects.

San Francisco, the first stop scheduled by Dr. Wells, is where he will receive his overseas vaccinations and passport, and also visit relatives with whom he plans to leave his car for the duration of his trip.

From San Francisco, Dr. Wells will travel to New Orleans, where he will book passage on a freighter through the Caribbean sea and thence to the west coast of Africa.

After a number of port calls along the coast, he expects to disembark at Cape Town which will serve as a home base for his plant research expeditions into the interior.

Dr. Wells, who retired from active teaching in 1957, first joined the college faculty in 1926. He was honored by the SOC student body his last term of teaching by having a special plaque commemorating the dedication and naming of a campus tree in his honor. The "Wayne Wells Christmas Tree" is decorated by the students each year prior to the holiday season.
