Various Views Aired At Discussion of Middle East Policy

Widely diverging views of what policies the United States should adopt in the future concerning the Middle East were aired at a meeting last night at Girls Community club sponsored by the Medford chapter, Oregon United Nations association. About 40 attended.

Discussion was led by a panel consisting of Mrs. Tucker McEvoy, Washington, D. C., Dr. Verne Blue, former historian with the U. S. State Department now on the faculty of Southern Oregon college; Bill Smith, Central Point, member of a Great Decisions study group; Don Stathos, chairman of the Jackson County Republican Central committee; George Pearce, formerly with the British Army in the Middle East; and Mrs. H. P. Bosworth Jr., of the UN chapter.

Although neither the panel or the audience reached any formal conclusions, the majority seemed to believe that regardless of whether sending troops into Lebanon was right or wrong, they must now be kept there until after elections are held or until a United Nations force can be sent into the country.

Sending Troops
It was said that the necessity of sending in troops, if such was the case, had been brought about by the lack of a consistent United States foreign policy for the Middle East and failure to realize the strength and importance of the underlying causes of Middle East tension, such as the rise of Arab nationalism.

A more consistent, realistic foreign policy for the Middle East should now be worked out and put into operation as quickly as possible, was one idea expressed.

Many believed that the United States should throw more consistent and firmer support to the United Nations, and not act contrary to UN opinion and findings. The importance of realizing this country's moral responsibility to aid underprivileged countries to "find their place in the sun" was stressed. It was brought out that such situations as the present crises are part of a world turmoil which cannot be solved by military force, and that internal struggles in the Middle East countries must be judged in this light and not only in the light of their relation to the spread of communism.

Expresses Opinion
Dr. Blue expressed the opinion that "one of the U. S. greatest mistakes is to 'use' other people, which is immoral" and once asked "Who are we frightening, the Lebanese, the Arabs or ourselves?"

Audience members, several of whom have traveled recently in the Middle East, brought up the question of the Arab-Israeli problem, gave views of whether or not Israel can unite the Arabs, and asked questions about the strength of the Lebanese rebels and how much they are being influenced and aided by Russia.

The meeting closed on this note: "Let us take a good look at the Arab world, let us try and decide what is the best, not only for the United States but for those who live in the Middle East, let us decide what the United States should do to relieve tension and lessen the cold war, let us formulate a sound policy and then stick to it."
