Buried Treasure

by Pinkney Gage

Author's Two Names
Enhances Value of Book

John Galsworthy's "The Island Pharisees" is not one of his better known works. Literally it doesn't rank with "The Forsyte Saga," and as a collector's item it lags far behind his earliest pieces that appeared under the nom de plume of John Sinjohn.

I was somewhat surprised to learn through a book dealer that a friend had authorized him to pay up to $40 for a copy of "The Island Pharisees," provided it was in excellent condition.

The dealer thought the order would be relatively easy to fill. He knew that it had sold at less than $20 on several occasions during the past decade. But when it came to buying a good copy, that was another matter.

The 312-page book, published in London in 1904, by William Heinemann, was issued in green cloth, both in the first and second issues of the first edition.

"LIBERTY BELL" MUG SPORTS SNAKE HANDLE

The only part of the mug I could see was that section where the handle is, but since the handle was in the form of a snake it seemed worth investigating.

Generally speaking, the snake has so few friends that whenever it is used on any kind of an art-form, the piece is pretty sure to be unusual.

This case was not an exception. When the proprietor finally got the piece out I saw that it was what is known as a "Liberty Bell" mug, one of the souvenir pieces put out by the thousands at the Philadelphia Centennial Exhibition, celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

Though I have heard of one of these mugs being found in amber glass, I have seen it in only two kinds—clear glass and milk white. This one was in the latter.

On one side of the mug was a representation of the Liberty Bell. On the other were

LIBERTY HALF-PENNY HAS

Though most of the products of the early U.S. Mint may not be noted for their beauty, they were and are creditable pieces of work, the lowly half-cent piece being no exception.

And so when an acquaintance acquired a 1796 half-cent piece that turned out to be a pretty crude job in comparison to others that also hadn't seen much use, he was considerably disappointed.

It was a counterfeit, one that was apparently made by a well-known collector half a century or so ago. But since counterfeits of the 1796 half-cent are almost as rare as the original, they have a collector's value as well.

There are two legitimate half-cent pieces of that date. To the casual glance, the obverse or face on each is as much like the other as the reverse which is identical.

ASHLAND YOUTHS FINED, SENTENCED

Ashland—Three Ashland youths were fined and sentenced to jail Friday in justice court by Justice Lee Wilmeth.

All three youths had been convicted of road sign vandalism.

Sheldon Johannes Harrison, 19, of 457 Mountain ave., was sentenced to 30 days in the county jail and was fined $100 plus court costs.

Jason Cordial Pierce, 21, of 437 Mountain ave., was charged with furnishing liquor to a minor in addition to the other offense. He was sentenced to 30 days in the county jail on each charge, to be served concurrently, and fined $50 plus costs.

The boys' companion, a 17-year-old youth, was given a 30-day suspended jail sentence and was fined $50 plus costs. In lieu of the jail term the youth must observe a 10:30 p.m. daily and midnight Saturday curfew on alternate nights and is confined to his home all evening on other nights.

GOLD HILL WOMAN

Seeks Judgment

Mrs. Etta Mae Williams, route 1, box 306, Gold Hill, is seeking a $19,950 judgment from Mrs. Josephine Louise Malot, 3009 Table Rock rd., Medford, on the basis of injuries she allegedly received on Feb. 20, 1958, according county courthouse records.

Mrs. Williams claims she received permanent injury to her left arm and hand, and that she suffers headaches and pain as the result of a two-car accident at East Fifth and Bartlett sts., Medford. She requests that the court grant her one of the accident vehicles, operated by Mrs. Malot.

Representing the plaintiffs are the Medford attorneys Hugh B. Collins and James A. Redden Jr.

SENTENCED

Edward Neff, Grants Pass, was given a three-year suspended sentence by Circuit Judge H. K. Hanna Friday morning after he pleaded guilty to charges of burglary not in a dwelling.

The distinguishing difference between the two lay in the list of novels published in the front of the book. In the first issue the novel, "Uriah the Hittite" is listed as written by Wolf Wyllarde.

That was a mistake that was discovered by the time the second issue went to press when the author's name was corrected to read "Dolf Wyllarde."

But while that was the distinguishing point about the book, it was not an explanation why the buyer was willing to go so high for a good copy.

The reason for that I learned only after a satisfactory copy had been found, and at $45.

The book is the one that gives both of the author's names on the title page. He is listed thus—"John Galsworthy (John Sinjohn) Author of 'A Man of Devon,' 'Villa Ruben,' etc."

On the base was another inscription—"Manufactured at the Centennial Exhibition by Gillinder & Sons."

According to the price marked on the piece with a grease pencil, it was $2, but the proprietor said it would have to pay $3. It was worth the extra dollar for the trouble he had had in getting it out of the window.

I paid it with only a minor protest.

Even in clear glass these little mugs usually bring from $10 to $20, and in the much rarer milk white $35 is not too high a price.

The reason is that the Philadelphia firm that made it produced a large line of centennial pieces for which there are plenty of collectors. But though the mugs were said to have been produced in substantial quantity, for some reason they are far scarcer today than many other of the items in the line.

CAP AND POLE

The design on the obverse is simple. Under the word LIBERTY appears a female head, facing right. Behind it is a liberty cap. Below is the date 1796. The difference between the two kinds lies in the cap.

If the cap is supported by a pole, it is the less valuable, ranging from $100 to $300. If there is no pole, it is worth from $200 to $500 or more.

So far as I have found, all the counterfeits that have been made of this coin are of the one with the pole.

To determine whether one of these half-cent pieces is a counterfeit it is necessary to compare it with a legitimate one. The evidence does not lie in the quality of the metal but in certain characteristic marks in the die.

My acquaintance sold his counterfeit for $75.

Oregon Pioneer Visible in New Rendition of Rediscovered Song

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Correspondent

Washington—We could, by squinting a bit, see the Oregon pioneer mounting the brow of the Cascades, his covered wagon behind him, as the setting sun gave a golden hue to the land of plenty spread out before him.

A. Robert Smith
 We—several hundred displaced Oregonians living here—could see this without any stretch of the imagination the other night as we sat on the banks of the Potomac and listened to the first rendition of a new symphonic arrangement of "Oregon, My Oregon."

Special Concert
 This was a special concert performed outdoors to honor both the state and its "rediscovered" song, as well as Herman D. Kenin, newly-elected president of the American Federation of Musicians, who is from Portland.

The AFM musicians did penance for not knowing until recently that Oregon even had a state song. They not only performed it beautifully, if controversially, but invited prominent Oregonians here to a dinner beforehand at the Statler.

As Sen. Wayne Morse told the audience at the outset, Oregonians here went to banquet after banquet for years without ever hearing "Oregon, My Oregon" while other states were being recognized by their state songs.

"But we have a detective on the Oregon congressional delegation," said Morse. "He's Charlie Porter. He rediscovered the Oregon state song and is the spirit behind this occasion tonight."

Hears of Complaint
 Kenin, hearing about Porter's complaint that Washington, D. C., musicians didn't know the Oregon song, sent the congressman the sheet music to be passed around to local orchestras. Now they all know it and play it.

So the other night the musicians did it up brown, with a 55-piece symphony orchestra. They gave it the Cecil B. DeMille treatment that was nothing like what we sang in 4-H club summer camp, as one young Oregonian put it.

After a long, moving slow-belt arrangement that was heavy with soft violins, the orchestra charged into the martial gallop—and the Oregon pioneer picked up his rifle and yelled "Fifty—four forty or fight!"

Played on Radio
 This part of the program, plus some commentary by Kenin and Porter, was played not only for about 5,000 listeners on the river bank but over a Mutual network radio hookup that went coast-to-coast.

Porter commented that some people object to the words of "Oregon, My Oregon" but he found them full of rich meaning. What do the words tell us, he asked.

Land of the Empire Builders—builders of an empire based on hard work, courage and tolerance of the other fellow's views;

Land of the Golden West—golden refers to sunsets and how we feel, not to material wealth;

Conquered and held by freemen—we shall ever be in debt to the free men and women who bravely pioneered our land;

Fairest, Best
 Fairest and the best—no question about this;

Onward and upward ever, forward and on, and on—there is still pioneering to be done in our great state, hard but satisfying work for all of us;

Hail to thee, land of Heroes, My Oregon—heroes, indeed, all those who seek to be worthy of this many-blessed portion of our great nation.

Congressman Porter called them "fitting words for stirring music."

Kenin told the audience the

Thomas A. Edison first demonstrated his three-wire electric light in Sunbury, Pa.
