

THRILLS (Safe Ones) Are His Business

FUN INVOLVES a lot of work. No one knows this better than the maintenance man at an amusement park. Each year millions of thrill-seekers ride the nation's roller coasters, Ferris wheels, whips, and carousels, but it takes a lot of rigid maintenance to keep the more violent devices—and even the non-violent ones—in perfect running order despite almost continuous use.

Tragedy is only a sharp turn away from excitement, and it's the maintenance man's job to keep those turns as slick, but as snug, as possible. These pictures show how one of them, Harvey Ouellette of Playland Park, Bay, N. Y., goes about it.

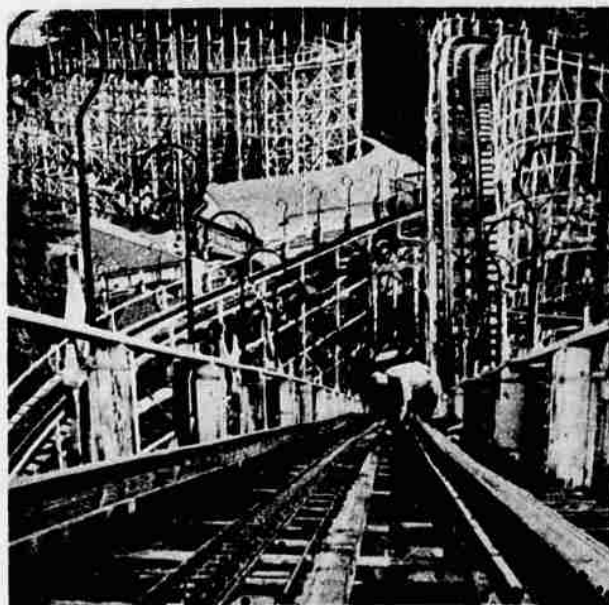

Without Harvey, riders would get an unamusing ride.

But he sees to it kids get safe, if not sane, fun.

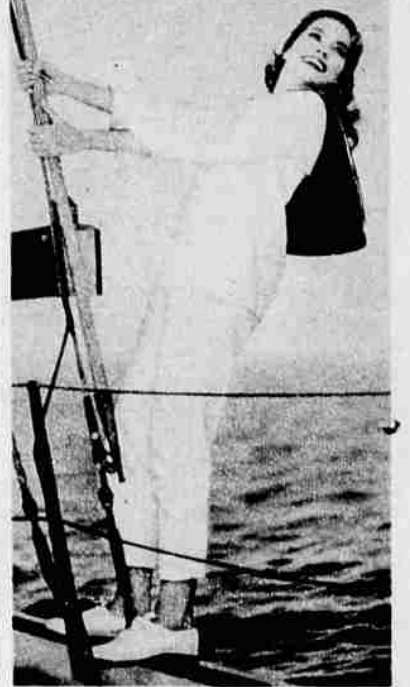

This is no job for clumsiness or fear of heights.

For 30 years, his work has had its ups and downs.
