

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a woman's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by available agencies and counselors.

Gregory F. — I want to spend my money as I please. Mrs. B. F. — He is equipping himself to be a weight lifter.

Gregory F. — I am 17 and am having a big feud with my family about my allowance. I return for various jobs I do around the house I get enough money to take care of my school expenses and have some left over for extras.

I feel I should be free to buy whatever I want with the extra money, but my parents seem to think they ought to dictate that. I am interested in physical culture. I buy all the magazines on this subject and quite a bit of equipment to build myself up.

I consider this a very worthwhile activity, but my parents want me to spend the money on dates and other things. I'm willing to go out with a girl if I like her particularly, but there is nobody I care for and I don't want to waste money on just any girl.

Mrs. R. F. — Greg has spent a fortune in exercise equipment in the past two years and we feel he is just going too far. As it is, he has built up his body so much it is hard to buy clothing for him.

When Greg gets home from school he goes into his room and works out until it is almost midnight. We can't see where all this is getting him. He is equipping himself only to be a weight lifter—and we had hoped he would go to college. His school grades are good enough for it.

We have tried to get Greg interested in music or photography, but it's no go. We have tried to get him to go out on dates with the daughters of some friends, but it doesn't work. They are lovely girls, yet he finds all kinds of faults with them. We are at an impasse.

The Council: The R. F.'s have real cause for concern, but they weaken their argument when they try to dictate on the subject of Greg's allowance. He should feel free to do as he pleases with it—especially since he has earned the money.

Most boys develop an interest in bodybuilding at one time or another, but when it becomes an exclusive interest it is an indication of a problem.

Like a girl who becomes overly absorbed in her physical appearance and uses much too much makeup, the boy who becomes exclusively concerned about his body has a feeling of inadequacy and seeks some artificial means of gaining confidence.

Because they do not put themselves to any real tests outside the confines of their rooms, these adolescents don't gain confidence they need. It takes a lot of tact and understanding to steer a youngster off this course. Perhaps the best way is to avoid criticism of the undesirable activity, but to show concern for the teen-ager's real desire to prove his worth.

Greg can't be forced to get interested in things as far afield from his current absorption as photography and music, but perhaps his father or some other man in the family can get him interested in competitive sports.

It should be pointed out to him that sports like track, swimming, boxing, wrestling, football and baseball develop a sense of rhythm that is essential to physical fitness. He should be forced to realize that the best athletes are not mere beef.

If college is a real possibility for Greg, it might be helpful to encourage him to think in terms of teaching physical training. This will help him to focus on a goal outside of perfecting his own body.

Grange News

One hundred Grangers and guests, including square dance enthusiasts, were entertained by Upper Applegate Grange at an open house program Friday, the feature of which was a square dance presentation by the Rogue Valley Black Lighters.

Other numbers on the program, which was arranged by Grace Buck's unit, were piano solos by Mary Beth Ramsey; two groups of western style songs by Rodney Snyder, who played his own accompaniments on the guitar; colored slides of wild flowers filmed in the Upper Applegate area by Wilfred Pearson and Mrs. Robert Sorber; a group of religious songs in four-part harmony sung by Mary Beth Ramsey, Joyce and Zoanne Hawkins, and Cheryl Adams; a humorous story by Stella Offenbacher; and a travelogue of Middle Eastern countries by Ella Dorn.

Mr. and Mrs. Dorn toured Lebanon, Syria and Persia in 1956. Beirut, Mrs. Dorn described as a beautifully clean city built on a series of hills similar to San Francisco, in an area which, she believes, grows the most delicious oranges produced anywhere in the entire world. Damascus, the oldest inhabited city in existence, is surrounded by a green paradise watered by the seven channels of a river. The ultra-modern hotel supplied throughout with exquisite hand-loomed linens, where the travelers stayed, is situated on the bank of one of the seven channels that is walled with rock. Like the cities of Lebanon, Damascus is kept spotlessly clean, and the Dorns awakened one morning to find workmen equipped with brooms and brushes industriously scrubbing the rock walls along the river channel to free them of moss and algae.

Many points of religious interest in the Middle East were visited, including the spot on the Damascus rd. where Saul, on his way to persecute the Christians, was stricken with blindness, and the home of Ananias on the street called Straight, where his sight was restored; the Moslem mosque where tradition claims the head of John the Baptist, is entombed, and the tomb in Jerusalem where his body is said to rest. Mrs. Dorn told of the impressive Moslem call to prayer which rings out five times daily, of the cleanliness and reverent silence which prevails within the mosques, and of the attitude of prayer of the worshippers which denotes total and complete submission to the Deity. She also described seeing the vast herds of domestic animals: camels, sheep, goats, and donkeys being moved to summer pasture in the same manner that has been followed each year since the days of Abraham.

She told of visiting the ruins Baalbek whose excavation was commenced in 1924. This ancient city dating back to 56 B. C., was constructed with the largest building stones known to man. These stones are 14 by 17 by 69 feet, and weighing 400 tons each, and no one knows how they were moved from the quarry to the construction site.

The Rogue Valley Black Lighters, a group of four couples, derives their name from the fact that their dances are executed in specially designed costumes under black light. They presented two square dances, "Dream On" and "Shiek of Araby" a round dance, "Hour Waltz," a quadrille, "Isle of Capri," and as encore numbers, a square dance entitled "Bye and Bye," and a quadrille, "Grand Square." Personnel of the troupe included Lois and Buzz Dibble, Georgia and Fred Foust, Rose and Chris Wolff, Medford; Esther and Earl M. Swift, Ashland; and Billy Foust, technician.

Refreshments of coffee and cakes were served following the program by Mrs. Anna Scott and Mrs. Florence Lance and Gail Buffington, after which the regular Grange session convened.

Overseer Pearl Byrne presided in the absence of the newly elected Worthy Master, George Redhead, who suffered an attack of virus pneumonia.

Other illness reported by the relief committee included that of Hugh Scovell, who has suffered two heart attacks while convalescing from major surgery. Mrs. Ina Pursel is still in the hospital after major spinal surgery. Ernest Dorn is convalescing at home from a severe ankle injury, and Mrs. Viola Finley and Glenn Salmaster have recovered from minor illnesses. The Forbes Browns were welcomed back after a long absence due to the illness of Brown.

In connection with the national contest in which Upper Applegate Grange is entered, Grange members were reminded to keep track of all community services rendered during the next two months.

Identical Twins Found To Be Susceptible To Smoking Habits

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Science Editor

New York—(UPI)—A world-famous scientist studied twins on 82 pairs of German twins to check out his belief that some persons are chemically set up before birth both to smoke cigarettes and to die of lung cancer.

Of the 51 pairs of identical one-egg twins among them, 33 pairs were alike as to their smoking habits. Nine pairs didn't smoke, 22 pairs smoked cigarettes and two pairs smoked cigars.

Only 12 pairs, less than a quarter of the 51, were different in their smoking habits, such as one twin not smoking while the other smokes, or one smoking cigarettes while the other smoked cigars.

But of the 31 pairs of "fraternal" or two-egg twins among the 82, only 11 pairs were alike as to smoking habits while 16 were distinctly different. Thus a difference was shown between identical and "fraternal" twins, a difference regarded statistically as highly "significant."

The statistics were used by Sir Ronald A. Fisher, professor of genetics at Cambridge University who is widely known as the "father of modern statistics." He was seeking information as a guide in the continuing scientific argument over the meaning of the large statistical studies which connect cigarette smoking with deaths from lung cancer.

Some statistical studies have been accepted by official public health bodies both in the United States and abroad smoking is a cause of lung cancer. But Dr. Fisher and several other well known scientists argue that they only show a "statistical association" and "cause" is not at all demonstrated.

In common with all other geneticists, Sir Ronald loves identical twins because they stem from one fertilized egg and so share the same heredity in the tiniest detail. Whatever can be proved about the influence of their heredity on the physical, chemical, and emotional make-ups of people, is provable through one-egg twins.

That it is possible to inherit a susceptibility to cancer—even cancer in specific places such as the lungs or the stomach—is generally accepted in science on the basis of factual evidence, some of it coming from identical twins.

But this is the first time studies of identical twins have suggested that susceptibility to the smoking habit, even down to the detail of whether cigarettes, cigars or pipes are smoked, may be established in the mother's womb by the transmitted totals of its ancestors' chemistry.

If that is so, then it would cent more cattle will be on the market in a short while, he added.

The lecturer's program by Frances Moffat was on safety. Everyone had to tell of a safety rule they practiced.

Grange Master Al Sims reported on the business of the first three days of the state convention. The report of the last two days will be given at the next meeting Aug. 1.

Griffin Creek Grange
Ladies of the Griffin Creek Grange will have a potluck dinner at the Roy LeVauden home in Fern Valley at 6:30 p.m. Thursday.
