

Church Group Making Effort To Help Migrant Farm Workers

Do you kids in the camp ever play baseball?" I asked. "New," replied Eddie. "Got no place to play." As an afterthought, he added: "Got no ball, either."

The migrant camp at Cheriton, Va., is almost identical to the one at Waddell's Corner. But there is a vast difference in the children.

The first thing you see when you drive into the Cheriton camp is a group of teenagers playing volleyball. Further on you find a dozen young girls, sitting in a circle on the grass, taking a sewing lesson. In the center of the camp is a neat frame building with a cross over the door. This is the Cheriton child care center, operated by the Migrant Ministry of the National Council of Churches.

Junior-Sized Cots

It has rows of junior-sized cots and cribs where migrant babies nap while their parents are working in the fields. It has boxes of used-but-still-useful toys, crayons and games. It has an old piano on which hymns can be played during Sunday School. . . a kitchen well stocked with milk and cookies.

Parked outside the center is a green station wagon with the name "Harvester" on the projector and chests of athletic equipment. The driver is a well-educated, soft-spoken Negro minister, the Rev. Isaac Henderson.

Serves Camps

Henderson serves the Cheriton camp and three others in its vicinity. He organizes sports activities for the children in the daytime, shows movies at night, conducts workshop services on Sunday. At all hours he serves as counselor, doctor-getter, loan arranger, and unfailing friend to any migrant in trouble.

The Home Missions Division of the National Council of Churches now has 38 full-time ministers like Henderson. They follow the migrants north in the summer, south in the winter. In addition, the Migrant Ministry has more than 400 seasonal employees who help to staff child care centers and migrant schools.

At present, the Migrant Ministry is reaching perhaps 10 per cent of the one million or more migrant workers who follow the crops. "There is much more we ought to be doing," said Mrs. Edith Lowry, its director. "But we haven't got the money."

Thanks in part to constant prodding by the Migrant Ministry and by the state and local church councils which support its work, the federal government and 20 state governments now have special committees charged with looking out for migrant's welfare. Responsible for Codes

The federal committee was appointed by President Eisenhower in 1954. It was responsible for the migrant transportation code recently put into effect. It is supporting a bill now pending in the House Banking Committee to authorize long-term low-interest government loans for construction of decent migrant housing.

Within the past two or three years, several states have undertaken ambitious programs to raise migrant living standards. Maryland, for example, is taking great pains to see that migrant children are enrolled in school in September, and that each child is given a transfer card when he leaves. The Virginia Department of Health conducted free tuberculosis clinics in migrant camps this summer. Delaware has adopted a strong housing code. Florida, New York, Pennsylvania, Oregon, Arizona, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan have outstanding migrant programs. Texas is beginning to move.

"We are making an honest-to-God attempt to make things a little better for the migrants than they have been in the past," said representative Charles F. Yeager Jr. "But it's a long, hard, uphill struggle."

Changes in House Of Representatives Seen in 1960 Census

Washington—(AP)—The Census Bureau forecast today that as a result of the 1960 census, 14 states will lose and nine states will gain seats in the House of Representatives.

The size of the House remains constant under the Constitution—435 members—but shifts in the population as recorded in the census every 10 years require the reapportionment of the seats allotted each state.

The prospective 1960 reapportionment will be greater than in 1950 when nine states lost seats and six gained.

180 Million People

The 1960 population, according to current estimates, will be about 180 million people, compared with the 1950 figure of 151,132,000.

Under the projected reshuffle for 1960 the largest gain in House seats will go to rapidly growing California. The state will pick up seven new House seats, the same gain recorded for the state after 1950. The heaviest losers in 1960 were expected to be New York and Pennsylvania with each dropping three seats. Arkansas and Massachusetts were expected to lose two seats each.

Ten states would lose a single seat according to the prediction. They are Maine, Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, West Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

Other state gaining in representation in 1960, according to the Census Bureau, would be Florida, three seats; Michigan, and Texas, two seats each.

Oregon To Gain

Arizona, Indiana, Maryland, Ohio and Oregon would gain a single representative in addition to one seat for Alaska as the new 49th state.

The census will be taken on April 1, 1960, and the Census Bureau has eight months to determine the total population.

The reapportionment resulting from the 1960 census will first make itself felt in the elections of the 88th Congress in November, 1962.
