"Now here's my idea, folks. I just finished varnishing the even-numbered steps, so walk on the odd ones, understand? Now for Pete's sake don't get them mixed up! Watch me. I step on the first one... and then the third... and the fifth? What! I'm in my stocking feet? My shoes are still on the first and third steps! But..."

"This is one week end we won't have to put up with those Dilbey pests, dear. I fixed it good. Told Dilbey our TV blew a tube, the hi-fi's broke, and that we've given up bridge and Scrabble. So let's settle down and relax, and... Who's coming up the front steps? With a ukulele under his arm!"

"There now! Told you we didn't need an expensive electrician for just a loose whatdoyoucallit. Now just plug in the air conditioner while I get my tools... Was that lightning? Funny, I didn't hear any thunder."

"It's quite simple. We all belong to different book clubs, so John and Ralph and I agreed to swap around. That way, we get three books for the price of... What's that? No, I haven't got the novel you were right in the middle of. Is this it on the chair? Let's see: 'Seasonal Migration Patterns of the Spotted Beetle.' Well, ah, sounds very interesting... er... educational."

The proud owner of one of those new cars, half-a-block long and loaded with chrome, zoomed into the gas station and called out airily, "Fill'er up, son!" The filling station attendant dutifully stuck the gas hose into the tank. After some time had passed, the attendant stuck his head in the window and complained, "Better shut off your engine, mister. You're gaining on me."

in Quote

Paying no attention to the traffic light, whizzing cars, or the policeman's outraged whistle, the little old lady marched across the street. Brakes squealed, horns blasted, and the cop strode angrily up to her. "Say, lady," he growled, "didn't you see my hand raised? Don't you know what that means?" "Well, I should hope I do," snapped the lady. "I've been teaching school for 25 years!"
