Stock Exchange Presidents Rap Margin Change

By ELMER WALZER UPI Financial Editor New York—(UPI)—The 40 per cent rise in stock market margins effective today may bring nothing more than a bit of psychological selling, followed by a new attempt to scale the record highs of 1956, Wall Street experts said today.

But the action, by the Federal Reserve Board, drew criticism from the president of the nation's two biggest stock exchanges.

Several leading congressmen and many economists, however, hailed the move as a step against inflation. Not Overusing Credit Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock Exchange, said the market was not overusing credit. And Edward T. McCormick, president of the American Stock Exchange, expressed the belief the present market activity and strength stemmed from confidence of the investors. He said the margin increase was "unfortunate and uncalled for."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.), a member of the Senate Banking committee, said the rise indicated the Federal Reserve Board could "admit mistakes and can improve." Could Upset Business Dr. Marcus Nadler, consulting economist for the Hanover Bank, said the Federal Reserve Board's action was an attempt to prevent too rapid an increase in the market. Such a rise, if unchecked, he said, might later cause a sharp decline that could upset business.

Market men said the margin rise from 50 per cent to 70 per cent came as no surprise to the financial district. It would not dislodge any big holdings of stock, the experts held, since most of these are covered by cash.

The new margins apply to new purchases and short sales. They have no impact on old accounts until new purchases are made and then only to a limited degree, it was explained.

The use of prepared and packaged foods in homes in France has risen 30 per cent in the last five years.

FSAA Recognizes City's Progress in Social Work Field

Medford's progress and potential in the field of social work has led to recognition by the Family Service Association of America, a representative of the association visiting here said yesterday.

Mrs. Frieda Burnside, special consultant from the western regional office in San Francisco, said this was one of 25 communities in the west selected as likely sites for FSAA-affiliated family service agencies. It was the only community in Oregon to be selected, she added. She explained that one such agency belonging to the FSAA existed in the state already—in Portland.

The FSAA, which currently includes 280 member-agencies in the United States, Canada and Hawaii, is devoted to setting high standards for the family service field, conducting research and disseminating knowledge, assisting the development of its members and representing the needs and deeds of family service to the nation as a whole.

Membership of such an agency in the FSAA would depend on future development, Mrs. Burnside said. The FSAA requires such an agency to have at least two full-time professional staff members, a sound financing arrangement and community understanding of its role.

Extension of Clinic The agency currently contemplated by the local committee would most likely operate as an extension of the child guidance clinic, according to Miss Celia Walker, supervisor of child services in the county welfare department. It would begin by employing volunteer counselors.

Since agencies belonging to the FSAA must derive funds from private sources, an agency started under the auspices of the clinic, which is part of the county health department, would have to develop into a privately-financed endeavor before becoming eligible for membership.

Advantages of belonging to the FSAA, according to Mrs. Burnside, include the recognition from affiliation in a national organization; reduced rates on subscriptions to FSAA publications pertaining to social work; access to results of the association's research projects; exchange of ideas; representation by a spokesman in Washington and the services of FSAA consultants.

But the action, by the Federal Reserve Board, drew criticism from the president of the nation's two biggest stock exchanges.

Several leading congressmen and many economists, however, hailed the move as a step against inflation. Not Overusing Credit Keith Funston, president of the New York Stock Exchange, said the market was not overusing credit. And Edward T. Cottage Grove Building Burns

Cottage Grove—(UPI)—A $50,000 fire swept through a Cottage Grove business house Monday, destroying a bowling alley, pool room, and a storage area for appliances.

Owner of the one-story concrete building, Wayne Cannon, who also is owner of a furniture and appliance store here, said about $9000 worth of furniture and appliances stored in the building was destroyed.

The bowling alley and pool room operated by Trevor Thompson were a total loss. Cottage Grove firemen fought the blaze for more than two hours before bringing the fire under control.

Cause of the fire was undetermined, although Cannon said the blaze may have been started by defective wiring. Cannon said the building and contents were covered by insurance, but did not reveal whether he would rebuild or not.
