Two "Indian chiefs" in full regalia and riding on horseback escorted three chartered buses and a number of private cars to a parking space beside an authentic Indian teepee last Sunday as the 6th annual Seventh-day Adventist summer youth camp got underway at Camp Umpqua.

Actually the "chiefs" were Richard W. Schwartz, and Ben Evans, Oregon Conference youth leaders, carrying out the Indian theme of the camp, located on the Umpqua river near Milo, Ore.

The summer session this year will be divided into three sections, girls aged 9-12 attending from Aug. 3-10, boys in the same age group, Aug. 10-17, and both boys and girls from ages 12-16 from Aug. 17-24.

Salvation Army Continues Work Started in London

By LOUIS CASSELS United Press International

Jesus shocked the religious leaders of his day by associating with bums, prostitutes and other sinners.

In this respect, as in others, the Salvation Army faithfully follows in its Master's footsteps.

For nearly a century, its blue-uniformed soldiers have been scandalizing respectable church folk by beating tambourines on street corners, holding prayer meetings in jails, and mingling unashamed with the outcasts of society.

The Salvation Army was founded by an English minister named William Booth who felt that the regular churches were failing to reach out to the people who needed them most desperately.

In 1865, Booth set up a dilapidated tent in London's grubby East End and began to preach the Christian gospel to thieves, gamblers, drunkards and street-walkers. He won many converts — but the churches did not want them. So Booth put them to work to save others like themselves.

The Hallelujah Army Within a few years there were thousands of them conducting open-air services in London streets. They were called "the hallelujah army."

The nickname gave Booth an idea. In 1878, he organized his fast-growing band along military lines and gave it the official title, the Salvation Army. The following year the first Salvation Army unit in the United States was organized by Lieutenant Eliza Shirley, an English girl who had moved to Philadelphia with her parents.

Today the Salvation Army has 16,792 local "corps" and "outposts" in 86 countries. Its U.S. branch, one of the largest, has more than 250,000 members. The national commander is Commissioner Norman S. Marshall, whose headquarters are in New York.

The Army's primary mission is still the same as it was when General Booth set up his tent in London — to preach the Christian gospel. But today its ministry to down-and-outers includes their physical as well as their spiritual needs.

Lack Squeamishness To outsiders, the impressive fact about the Salvation Army's far-flung welfare program is its utter lack of squeamishness. It helps the people who need help the most, and doesn't worry about getting its hands dirty in the process.

In more than 100 U. S. cities, there are Salvation Army rehabilitation centers where men who have "lost their grip on life" are nurtured back to self-respect and self-support through work-therapy and counseling. These centers accept the real skid-row alcoholics who are too destitute and too disorganized to get effective help anywhere else.

Other Salvation Army services are almost too numerous to list.

The Army, for example, provides lodging houses for the indigent and for unwed mothers; camps for slum children; Christmas cheer for poor families; conducts religious services for prisoners, organizes golden age clubs for the elderly, and sponsors recreation centers for servicemen.

Its help is given solely on the basis of need. The cynic is as welcome as the convert.

No Passive Members There are no passive members in the Salvation Army. Everyone who enrolls as a soldier is expected to devote as much time as possible to the Army's work.

Commissioned officers, the ordained ministers of the Army, are trained at the four "cadet schools" in New York.

Nazarene Minister Continues Series "The Happiness of Holiness" will be the subject of the morning worship service, Sunday by the Rev. Raymond W. Hurn. The choir will sing "God's Power and Might" and the radio male quartette will be featured in the service.

Mr. Hurn will continue his series of messages from the Book of Revelation, the second to be given Sunday at 7 p.m. entitled "The Vision of Heavenly Destiny."

Chicago, Atlanta and San Francisco. They receive extremely modest salaries, out of which they must purchase their own food and uniforms. If they marry, they must marry a mother Salvation Army officer. They live "on post" at Salvation Army centers and are subject to call for duty 24 hours a day.

Despite rigid economy which holds overhead costs to a minimum, the Army's vast program of welfare services requires far more money than can be contributed by its own faithfully-ithing but generally poor membership.

The Army looks to the public to bridge this gap. In some communities, it conducts an annual "maintenance appeal." In some, it participates in Community Chest or united givers campaigns.

In recent years, the Army has received considerable financial support from members of the "respectable" Christian churches who, no longer scandalized, are just a bit humbled by the men and women in the blue uniforms.
