

Backstairs: 'Demo' China at Table

By DAYTON MOORE
United Press International
Washington — (UPI) — Backstairs at the White House: Guests of President and Mrs. Eisenhower eat from "Democratic" china at official dinners and luncheons at the White House.

The cups, platters and plates were added to the White House collection by former President Truman and the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

So far, the Eisenhowers have added only one piece to the collection—a Castleton service plate of raised medallion pattern in pure coin gold.

Mrs. Eisenhower has taken a personal hand in rearranging the china display in a special room on the ground floor.

Last year, at Mrs. Mamie Eisenhower's direction, the room was rearranged with several additions and reclassifications.

having remained in continuous executive possession since its purchase.

Five presidents—Andrew Johnson, William Howard Taft, Warren G. Harding, Calvin Coolidge and Herbert Hoover—are not represented in the china collection. They didn't buy any state china during their terms in office.

But to round out the collection efforts are being made to get family pieces they used while in the White House.

Lincoln's administration is represented by pieces from one family and two state services. Included are pieces used by the Civil War president at his summer White House at the U. S. Soldiers' Home.

Woodrow Wilson added the first White House state dinner service of American manufacture—a Lenox set decorated in deep blue and gold, each piece bears the personal seal of the President. The set also was used by Harding, Coolidge and Hoover.

A recent addition to the china room display is a set of first lady plates represented by the Royal Berlin factory as a tribute to Mrs. Eisenhower. They are decorated with the portraits of 25 first ladies between 1789 and 1921, framed by a wide gold border.

Mrs. Benjamin Harrison and Franklin D. Roosevelt designed White House china. Mrs. Harrison's has a golden cornstalk and flower edge design. Roosevelt's incorporates the three feathers and roses of his family crest.
